Nato clears highway in the sky to get US prisoners out of Serbia

Cypriot leader flies out on mercy mission

BY MICHAEL EVANS, ANNA BLUNDY IN MOSCOW AND MICHAEL THEODOULOU IN NICOSIA

NATO cleared a "safe corridor" through its bombardment last night in the hope that the Cypriot mission to Belgrade would win the release of the three captured American soldiers.

At the same time, President Yeltsin announced in Moscow that he was working on a new peace initiative to end the Kosovo crisis, and Belgrade claimed that peace had been restored to the province.

The claim was dismissed by Nato, which underlined its determination to maintain the bombing campaign by announcing that Yugoslav television and radio stations were being targeted to try and stop the flow of propaganda.

The proposed mission to release the three American soldiers went ahead after Spyros Kyprianou, Speaker of the

Mr Kyprianou said that he had received assurances that the three soldiers would be released, but the Greek Air Force transport plane that took him to Belgrade was ordered back to its base at Athens, thwarting plans for the aircraft to wait at Belgrade to fly the soldiers to Cyprus for a formal handover at Larnaca airport.

Mr Yeltsin's latest move to find a peace formula was announced as he prepared to meet Igor Sergeev, the Defence Minister, and as the Foreign Minister Igor Ivanov praised France for backing the idea of adapting the Rambouillet accord to make it acceptable to the Serbs.

As Nato continued with another night of bombing, the alliance announced that it was sending 8,000 troops to Albania to help with the refugee crisis, but officials continued to deny that they intended to send ground forces into Kosovo unless there was a peace deal.

Javier Solana, the Nato Secretary-General, said: "What the international community is not prepared to do at this moment is to wage war on Serbian territory. That is not our objective. Our objective is only to weaken Milosevic's regime and weaken his military capacity."

As if in anticipation of a Nato ground offensive, Yugoslav forces began laying mines along the border with Albania and there were reports that tanks and guns were also being moved up to the frontier. Yugoslav troops were also seen digging in to form defensive positions close to the border.

European Union foreign ministers, meeting in Luxembourg, declared that there was no alternative to the use of force to compel Belgrade to meet the demands set by the alliance.

"The EU will not accept the success of a policy of deportation and destruction of a people," he said.

Jehona Alin is an old hand at the Brazde refugee camp, cheering other children who have lost their parents

Jehona is five. She turned her back for a moment. Her family vanished

FROM STEPHEN FARRELL AT BRAZDE CAMP

ONE girl sits alone, unclaimed, in the lost children tent established by British soldiers at the vast Brazde refugee camp. Forged from her home in Ferizaj and herded on a train to the border by Serbian forces, Jehona Alin, five, was separated from her family when she disappeared behind a tree to relieve herself. When she emerged, her mother, two sisters, and two brothers were nowhere to be seen.

For three days, Jehona has sat at Brazde. She has no idea where, or even in which country, her family are, and aid agencies are equally in the dark. Her cheerfulness and courage, however, have endeared her to the soldiers trying to bring order to this shifting mass of humanity.

They have set up the lost children base to help those who become confused in the rows and rows of identical white tents, and have reunited more than 40 with their parents. But not Jehona, who now comforts the newer arrivals as she sits on a makeshift bed drawing felt-tip pictures of her parents.

She appears oblivious to the noise of trucks and helicopters delivering supplies around her. Wearing a white T-shirt, blue trousers and white Barbie sandals, she seems happy surrounded by fluffy elephants and centipedes.

"My dad told us 'Go, go, there are bombs, you are going to be killed' and sent us away," she said through an interpreter. "I was with my mummy, brothers and sisters on the train. I wanted to go to the toilet and I went behind the trees because I did not want people to see me with my clothes off. When I went back I didn't find my mother. Some girl put me in a car and I do not know how I got here."

She smiles and says she likes the British soldiers because they give her chocolates, fruit juice, cans of food and clothes. They, too, are full of praise for her: "When the other children come here she walks over, offers them sweets and says 'Don't cry, I'm sad too because I've lost my parents, but I'm not crying,'" said Captain Bill Soper. "I would do anything to trace Jehona's parents. She's as bright as a button, has been able to give us all their names and even her home telephone number. We will find them."

Cypriot Parliament, was guaranteed safe passage for his flight to Belgrade in spite of the continuing bombing sorties over Yugoslavia.

The Pentagon promised him an "air corridor", but William Cohen, the US Defence Secretary, said there would be no halt in the airstrikes throughout the day. "We've deconflicted the airspace so they can go," Kenneth Bacon, the Pentagon spokesman said before Mr Kyprianou flew from Athens yesterday.

Mr Kyprianou, a former President of Cyprus, hopes to see President Milosevic today, but there were confusing reports over whether the Yugoslav leader had any intention of releasing the Americans. The most extreme politicians in Belgrade said they would be kept in custody and charged with terrorism.

Armchair punters' weekend bonanza

BY MICHAEL HORSNELL AND SUSIE STEINER

THE nation's sofas are set to groan under the heavy weight of the male population this weekend as an unprecedented number of top sporting competitions coincide.

Sporting anoraks could be trapped in a remote-control quandary as they frantically flick from the Grand National to the FA and Scottish Cup semi-finals and on to the Brazilian Grand Prix. As if that weren't enough, they are to be further torn by golf, rugby, cricket and boxing.

On a weekend when everyone will miss out on something through sheer lack of small screens, one party is rubbing its hands with glee. Bookmakers expect to take a record £100 million in bets — dwarfing National Lottery sales which average a mere £60 million each Saturday.

The Grand National will command the lion's share of wagers, attracting an estimated £70 million. But Sean Boyce, spokesman for Ladbro-kes, said: "This year the sporting constellation has come into alignment for us at exactly the right time. I suppose you could describe it as a kind of sporting supernova."

Both Ladbrokes and William Hill will be opening their shops for extra hours and Hill's spokesman Graham Sharpe said: "If you can't find a sporting event to bet on this weekend you never will. If you aren't moved by the opportunities, then stick to the Lottery because you have no soul."

The Grand National at Aintree will compete for the nation's attention against France vs Scotland in the Five Nations Rugby at Paris.

The US Masters in Augusta will vie for airtime against Prince Naseem's fight with Paul Ingle, while the Celtic v Dundee Scottish FA Cup semi-final kicks off.

Sunday will be more hectic still. Football leads the field with the FA Cup semi-final between Manchester United and What odds will you give on my husband not moving from the television all weekend?

Arson, followed by Newcastle v Spurs. But both will clash with England's one-day cricket match against India.

Later, England plays Wales at Wembley in the Five Nations Rugby tournament, risking a clash with the Brazilian Grand Prix which kicks off at 6pm. Choosing the grand prix, however, means forgoing the other Scottish FA Cup semi-final between St Johnstone and Rangers.

Or digging the garden.

Banks put savers first after rate cut

BY ALASDAIR MURRAY AND SUSAN EMMETT

HOMEOWNERS have been left in the dark as to whether they will enjoy another reduction in their mortgage payments after big lenders failed to follow the Bank of England in cutting interest rates yesterday.

The Bank reduced rates by a quarter point to 5.25 per cent. But banks and building societies said they would not cut their mortgage rates immediately because they needed to consider the needs of Britain's 30 million savers as well as the 10 million homeowners.

While homeowners have enjoyed a sharp fall in mortgage costs, savers — especially pensioners — have seen their income plummet, and many instant access accounts pay rates that are lower than inflation.

The only change in mortgage rates came from Virgin Direct, which announced an immediate cut on its One account rate to 6.45 per cent. But it left the rates on its savings account at 5.75 per cent.

The City, which believes that the Bank has just about finished its cutting spree, gave yesterday's reduction only a muted welcome. The FTSE 100 index of leading shares ended this week's record-breaking run to close down 35.3 at 6437.9. The pound, however, strengthened on optimism that the British economy is heading for a "soft landing".

Industry and the unions continued to plead for dramatically lower rates, insisting that the Bank had not done enough to help the manufacturing sector.

Dr Ian Peters, deputy-director general of the British Chambers of Commerce, said: "The cut is helpful, but insufficient to put the economy firmly back on track for recovery. Manufacturing industry in particular will give a cautious welcome to this cautious cut and seek for the bank of go further at its May meeting."

Hague's aide puts truckers in a spin

WILLIAM HAGUE made a pre-emptive strike in the Newark by-election campaign yesterday but had to share star billing with the Tories' first woman communications chief, Amanda Platell, the former Fleet Street Editor, appeared at Mr Hague's side in public for the first time since her surprise appointment as head of news and media.

The by-election, to be held next month, follows the conviction of the Labour MP Fiona Jones for falsifying her election expenses declaration. She was expelled from the House of Commons, leading to a by-election the Tories have to win it Mr Hague is to avoid another weller of speculation about his leadership of the Conservative Party.

First on the agenda for the four-hour visit was a delegation of road hauliers objecting to the 10 per cent increase in diesel duty. Miss Platell, 41, described as Mr Hague's best photo-opportunity in the headlines that accompanied her appointment, was an instant hit. "Who are you? Are you Mr Hague's secretary?" one of the truckers asked. Before Miss Platell could flash one of her well-honed smiles, another driver hastily intervened. "No, it's the woman who was in the papers. That spin-doctor."

A few moments later Miss Platell had secured the prom-

Andrew Pierce, back at The Times after a short absence and back on the campaign trail, joined William Hague as the Tory leader stole a march on the other parties

ise, at least from the assembled overalls, that that they would be voting Conservative in the by-election. "Pity you're not standing," one added for good measure.

From there it was on to a charity-run village playgroup threatened by the minimum wage. The running costs of the Second Calverton Pre-School Playgroup, formed in 1971, have soared by £5,000 a year. Staff have offered to sacrifice their holiday pay, but the group will be closed within five months unless alternative money is found.

Mr Hague was in his element. Ignoring the old adage that politicians should steer clear of animals and babies, he stepped straight into the sandpit and pushed children down the slide under the watchful eye of Miss Platell. While staying in the background, talking to the parents, she nevertheless kept an eye on the most photogenic children for the photographers. Within 30 minutes the Tory roadshow, complete with Sebastian Coe, Mr Hague's chief of staff, had swept on to another appointment guaranteed to ensure maximum publicity: the local newspaper offices just before deadline. Only a calamitous wedding ceremony in which the bridegroom hobbled down the aisle in a plaster cast, with a bridesmaid in a similar condition, denied him the main headline.

New Labour's spin-doctors had obviously been at work again, Miss Platell was heard to mutter. However, The William and Amanda Roadshow left wreathed in smiles, with more cameras to record the event. It is a show that could run and run.

Keeping an eye on the main chance: Amanda Platell on the by-election trail yesterday

Police follow up programme on Lawrence five

Michael Harvey reports on the TV interviews with suspects

POLICE investigating the murder of Stephen Lawrence were following up new lines of inquiry last night after the five suspects broke their public silence about the killing.

One of them, David Norris, said he was in the area on the night of the murder, staying at his girlfriend's house. Previously he had refused to give any details of his whereabouts. Two others, Neil and Jamie Accourt, said that they carried knives before Stephen was stabbed to death in Eltham, southeast London, in 1993.

The disclosures came in interviews with the men on Tonight, a new ITV current-affairs programme. Mr Norris, 22, who lives with his mother in Chislehurst, three miles from the scene of the murder, told the interviewer Martin Bashir that he was at his then girlfriend's house about half-a-mile from Well Hall Road, where Stephen was stabbed by a bus stop. Mr Norris is one of two of the men who in theory could still be tried for the murder after the original case against him and Neil Accourt was thrown out by a magistrate for lack of evidence. Jamie Accourt, Luke Knight and Gary Dobson were acquitted at the Old Bailey two years ago after a private prosecution by the Lawrence family failed. They cannot be tried again for the same crime.

Bashir interviewed the five men separately at a neutral location. Neil and Jamie Accourt said that they were at home together on the night of the murder, playing computer games with their mother as a witness. They give conflicting stories about when they had heard about the murder. Jamie Accourt, 22, said he did not hear about it until the next day while Neil, 23, said he heard about it that night from someone who called at their house.

Gary Dobson, 23, said that he was out with his family having dinner and then later visited the Accourts at their home a short distance from the murder scene. He also said that he heard about the murder that night from a third person, Luke Knight, 22, said he was at home in bed.

All five were asked directly for the first time: "Did you kill Stephen Lawrence?" All five protested their innocence. Mr Dobson said that the five were a group of "little bastards" on the estate, adding they were "rascals, loveable rogues". Neil Accourt accepted that he had a reputation: "If someone put trouble my way I would not stand for it, simple as that."

NEWS IN BRIEF

Animal exporters face tougher rules

The live export of animals to the Continent is to be subject to tighter controls. The Ministry of Agriculture is to send its own vets to check animal welfare, rather than exporters choosing and paying for their own vet. Vets must ensure that animals are fit for travel and that exporters are abiding by rules on rest periods and space.

Elliot Morley, Minister for Farm Animal Welfare, said: "The Government cannot lawfully ban the live export trade because of EU single market rules. But the Government is committed to ensuring the highest possible standards." However, animal welfare groups expressed concern that the rules would not come into force before the summer peak of the trade.

Salmon fishing curbed

New bylaws to conserve spring salmon stocks in England and Wales have been approved by the Government. Anglers will be required to release all salmon they catch before June 16. Netsmen fishing in estuaries and coastal waters will have a start date of June 1. However, the Welsh Office said an exception will be made for the coracle net fisheries on the River Towy in South Wales because of their "unique cultural and historical significance".

'Schools hoard £500m'

Head teachers are hoarding £500 million under the Local Management of Schools policy inherited from the last Government, while experienced teachers are being sacked to cut budgets, the conference of the National Association of Schoolmasters and Union of Women Teachers was told. The union called on the Government to rethink the policy, which it blames for the sacking of 8,500 teachers in the first half of this decade.

Refugee detained

José Da Conceição, 32, a refugee from Angola, who admitted the manslaughter of David Phillips, 42, three days after escaping from a secure psychiatric unit in West London, was ordered to be detained under the Mental Health Act by the Old Bailey. He pleaded guilty on the ground of diminished responsibility. Da Conceição, a paranoid schizophrenic, stabbed Mr Phillips with a carving knife after discovering that his victim had been given his old room.

Couple were murdered

A couple whose bodies were found in the living room of their flat in Barrow-in-Furness, Cumbria, were murdered, police said yesterday. The bodies of Derek McKell, 33, and his girlfriend Lorraine Richards, 46, were discovered by Mr McKell's mother on Wednesday. Detectives think the unemployed couple may have known their killer as there were no signs of forced entry and nothing appeared to have been stolen from the flat.

Rugby runaway hunt

Half of the players on an African rugby team who have gone missing in Britain are now officially listed as illegal immigrants. A dozen players from the Ivory Coast under-19s, who went missing in west Wales after their team finished 26th of 32 participating in a World Cup rugby contest, failed to join their team-mates flying out of Gatwick Airport yesterday. Police and immigration officials have been searching for the five forwards and seven backs.

YOUR HOME IS AT RISK IF YOU DO NOT KEEP UP REPAYMENTS ON A MORTGAGE OR OTHER LOAN SECURED ON IT. Borrowers must be aged 18 or over and reside in the UK. All mortgages are subject to status, valuation and conditions. A first charge over the property will be required. Life cover to repay the mortgage outstanding at any time on the mortgage is required. A written quotation is available on request. The actual rate of interest is dependent on the loan. Typical example: For a loan of no more than 90% of the value of the property if you borrow £40,000 over 25 years and opt for our 5 year fixed rate of 5.99% (APR 6.9%) your net monthly payments would be £184.69 for the first 60 months and £214.29 for the remaining 240 months. This example assumes that at the end of the fixed rate term you will revert to our standard variable rate - currently 6.99% (APR 7.2%). Net monthly payments show the benefit of tax relief at 10% under the MRRAS scheme. MRRAS is calculated under current tax legislation and may alter; it is available on the first £30,000 of the mortgage only. The total amount repayable is £108,052 gross and this includes an electronic funds transfer fee of £25. The cost of any agreement put in place to repay capital has not been included in this example. Rate is current as at 4th March 1999 and is subject to variation. An administration charge of £35 is payable if the mortgage is redeemed before the end of the term. Mortgages are not available on the Channel Islands or the Isle of Man. For your added security, all telephone calls to Prudential will be recorded and/or monitored. Prudential financial consultants only advise on products offered by the Prudential Marketing Group.

Owen scores with £1m book deal

Publishers take a gamble on England star's future, report Adrian Lee and Elizabeth Judge

MICHAEL OWEN has signed sport's most lucrative publishing deal: more than £1 million for three books.

The successful bidders admitted yesterday that they had taken a gamble on the enduring form, fitness and appeal of the teenage football prodigy. His third book — an autobiography — will not be published until after the 2002 World Cup, when he will be all of 22.

The deal also shows remarkable faith in the England team's ability to qualify for both the Euro 2000 championships, on the back of which the second book will be published, and the World Cup.

Leading publishers had scrambled to sign Owen, the Liverpool striker. A spokeswoman for HarperCollins, which won the race, said yesterday: "He is quite simply the biggest sports star of the moment. He has a fantastic following and we believe he has lasting appeal."

The payments to Owen, who will be given "some help" in writing his life story, will be phased over four years. Even if his career ends this week, he will receive the full amount. The fee is thought to be the largest paid to any teenage author. Few authors from any field can match it, although Jeffrey Archer received £22 million for a three-book deal.

Since the publication of Fever Pitch, by Nick Hornby, in 1993, there has been a surge in demand for sports books. David Luxton, of the specialist bookshop Sports Pages, said: "People will buy a book about their favourite player irrespective of how good it is. But the best sellers are the ones with a decent story, like Addicted, by Tony Adams, which sold enormously."

He thought the sum paid by HarperCollins represented sound business sense and that Owen's autobiography would undoubtedly become a best seller. But he said of the growing trend among young sports stars to publish their life stories: "The readership is not stupid. They know that if they wait there must be more to come."

Michael Earley, the publishing director of Methuen, said: "Sports books are a thriving market, but this is a huge risk. You generally see them contracted for only one book. They must believe that he has a future."

Owen's representatives approached several publishers after the World Cup, inviting them to pitch for the contract.

HarperCollins has previously published autobiographies by Adams, the Arsenal defender and recovering alcoholic, Ian Botham and Nigel Mansell. Adams's book is now the best-selling football autobiography.

Owen's first book, on football skills, will appear this summer in conjunction with a six-part BBC television series. A scrapbook featuring his early life will be published next year, to be followed finally by the autobiography, in summer 2002. It leaves the way clear for part two of his life story to be published later, if his career continues to flourish.

Autobiographies by footballers are notoriously bland and the quotation attributed to Owen yesterday did nothing to break the mould. He said: "I'm very excited to be working with HarperCollins. It's a great opportunity to pass on the skills I've learnt to young footballers everywhere and to tell my own story."

The deal will boost the millionaire status of Owen, who has a series of well-paid advertising contracts. According to one survey, he is Britain's 17th richest sportsman.

The bestselling sports book is the autobiography of Dickie Bird, the cricket umpire, which sold 500,000 copies last year. However, it may well be overshadowed by the life story of Alex Ferguson, the Manchester United manager, which is published later this year. He is said to have signed a £1 million deal.

It's still football, after a fashion

By JOANNA BALE

AS Michael Owen, Alan Shearer and David Seaman modelled the new England kit yesterday, thousands of young fans screamed with excitement at seeing their heroes, but many parents silently groaned in anticipation at having to fork out another £50 for replica outfits.

Craig Winterborne, whose Joshua, aged 7, was sporting an old-style England shirt at the event at the Birmingham NEC, said: "Josh got this strip for Christmas but now it's obsolete. He's already asked for the new strip but I've told him that he can save up his pocket money because we can't afford it."

Richard Moore, of Umbro, manufacturer of the new kit under a £50 million sponsorship deal, defended its two-year lifespan after the unveiling for the BBC's Match of the Day show: "It's now an industry norm for kits to be changed on a two-year cycle. We have to change them periodically to keep up with technological changes."

Although styled in a retro 1960s fashion with a simple round neck line, the new strip, according to Umbro, is the most technologically advanced ever. The shirt is made from Microfibre, which, says Umbro, is "a highly durable and synthetic material that is lightweight and soft to the touch". To give players the edge in humid conditions, "the process of moisture management is helped by application of a Vaportech coating which draws moisture from the skin". The kit goes on sale on April 23, St George's Day.

BALKANS WAR: POLITICS OF CONFLICT

Yugoslav borders have been shaped by the hand of history. From the turmoil of 1914 to present times, the region has been racked by rivalries

1914: SERBIA ON THE EVE OF WAR

Serbia achieved independence in 1878. After the 1912 and 1913 Balkan wars Serbia occupied Kosovo, Macedonia and part of Thrace. The Austro-Hungarian Empire included Croatia, but after 1908 Austria also annexed Bosnia, causing lingering Serb resentment. In 1914 Gavrilo Princip, right, a Serb nationalist, sent shockwaves around the world when he assassinated Archduke Franz Ferdinand, sparking the First World War.

1918: THE NEW STATE OF THE SOUTH SLAVS

Yugoslavia under Tito, right, had the same international boundaries as the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes, established after the First World War. Keeping the separate states or "republics" that existed in the region, Tito created another by separating Macedonia from southern Serbia. He also gave autonomous status to Vojvodina and Kosovo to reduce Serb influence in Federal Yugoslavia.

1992: YUGOSLAVIA FRAGMENTS

Tito's Yugoslavia started to break up in 1991, with wars of independence in Slovenia and Croatia, which were recognised by the EU in 1991. Macedonia and Bosnia followed, but Montenegro remained with rump Yugoslavia. After Bosnia declared independence war broke out in 1992, lasting until 1995. The Muslim President Izetbegovic, right, led the fight for a united Bosnia against Serb separatists.

'Ethnic cleansing' plans laid years ago

THE discovery of a detailed Serb plan to drive ethnic Albanians out of Kosovo — devised by Belgrade long before Nato airstrikes began — shows that the blueprint for President Milosevic's ethnic cleansing was drawn up shortly before the Second World War by a Serb nationalist responsible for triggering the First.

The chilling document — codenamed The Horseshoe Plan — came to light last week when a copy was leaked to Joschka Fischer, the German Minister of Foreign Affairs, by the government of an unidentified country bordering Serbia.

Le Monde reported yesterday. Dated February 20 and in Serbo-Croat, the substantial document, believed to have been stolen, shows Belgrade planned the deportation of ethnic Albanians, particularly those in Kosovo's urban centres, at least a month before the Nato bombing began.

The plan proves that the Serb actions were premeditated and not a reaction to the airstrikes, as claimed by Belgrade. It appears obvious that President Milosevic never had any intention of respecting the October 1998 peace agreement made with Richard Holbrooke, the American envoy, but was simply delaying allied airstrikes while he continued to manoeuvre Serb forces into position around Kosovo.

The document is significant, too, because of the written evidence it would provide against the Serb leader should he be brought before an international war crimes tribunal.

The German Government has confirmed that it is studying the document, but has yet to decide whether to make it public. "Operation Horseshoe began in Kosovo in November 1998... It shows that the Yugoslav Army and police had planned, and then started, to drive people out of certain parts of Kosovo, from November until the Rambouillet negotiations began," Rudolf Scharping, the German Defence Minister, told Le Monde. During the France peace talks, Serb repression in Kosovo was reduced. However, when the talks failed in February, ethnic cleansing was relaunched.

Milosevic expulsion policy drawn up before war, writes Susan Bell

The Horseshoe Plan has its roots in a document written more than 60 years ago by Vaso Cubrilovic — a Serb academic who held the dubious distinction of being the youngest of the seven assassins responsible for the death of Archduke Franz Ferdinand in Sarajevo in 1914, triggering the First World War. Sentenced at the age of 17 to 16 years in prison for treason, Cubrilovic was released after the Austro-Hungarian Empire's collapse in 1918. He became a distinguished historian and a professor of philosophy at the University of Belgrade before serving as a minister under President Tito. He died in 1990, when 94.

His pamphlet, The Expulsion of the Albanians by the Serbs, published in 1937, advocated "using the brute force of an organised state" to drive as many Albanians [Albanians] as possible from Kosovo towards Albania and Turkey. The scorched-earth tactics of Mr Milosevic echo methods recommended by his mentor, who proposed "secretly burning down Albanian villages and city quarters".

Cubrilovic's description of "the Albanian problem" has overtones of the run up to Hitler's Final Solution as he discusses the best way to systematically persecute ethnic Albanians to make it "intolerable" for them to remain in Kosovo. He advocates crushing any local uprisings, but gives a warning against using the Yugoslav Army, preferring gangs (one is immediately reminded of Milosevic's feared warlord Arkan) and forces from neighbouring states. (Again, one thinks of the Macedonian guards who this week evicted 30,000 refugees from a makeshift camp) who must "secretly be given support".

The Horseshoe Plan appears to have dispelled any lingering pacifist doubts among Western leaders, many of whom seemed unable to believe, despite the precedent of Bosnia, that at the end of the 20th century a European leader would carry out such a plan using methods that differ very little from those outlined before the Second World War.

Supporters deny Rugova has 'sold out' to Milosevic

Kosovo's unofficial president could yet emerge as a vital peace broker, reports Tom Walker in Belgrade

Other Albanian sources have been puzzled by Mr Rugova's behaviour, and in particular by his use of English during the press conference last week that proved he was still alive. His party, the Democratic League for Kosovo (LDK), has tried for much of the past year to persuade their leader to speak English, to help raise his international profile. Mr Rugova, however, has shied away from the language of the information age, preferring French.

"He spoke English and I couldn't understand a word of what he was talking about," said one source. "That could well be where the confusion is coming from."

Serbian state media say Mr Rugova, his wife and two children are being "protected" by the police in Pristina, but most diplomats regard him as being under house arrest. They fear that his appeals for meetings with Western leaders are being refused by Belgrade, which instead is trying to push him into making contacts with the Russians. State media have even suggested that Mr Rugova might fly to Moscow for talks with President Yeltsin.

Russian news agencies yesterday claimed that the Albanian was in Belgrade again, for a second meeting with Mr Milosevic. There were no pictures to confirm this on state television, however.

KLA representatives have said only that Mr Rugova will be "severely disciplined" if he does any deal without consulting the guerrillas. Their new government-in-exile for Kosovo does not include the LDK. Any agreement that allows Mr Milosevic to wriggle clear of international peacekeepers in Kosovo would put Mr Rugova in grave danger, Western security experts in Yugoslavia have admitted.

Ivica Dacic, spokesman for Mr Milosevic's Socialist Party, yesterday lauded Mr Rugova's "search for dialogue and a negotiated settlement".

His father was executed by communists after they restored Kosovo to Yugoslav control under Tito. Despite his family background of violence, however, Mr Rugova has been a Gandhi-like leader, preaching a policy of non-cooperation with Belgrade and the establishment of parallel education and health systems.

DESPITE the misspelling, a dirty brass placard announces a once grand presence: His Majesty's Legation: 1870-1916. The British Embassy has been closed for more than 80 years; since then, two world wars, the formation and finally the destruction of Yugoslavia have taken place.

The building is now a music academy, and from the faded terracotta building comes the haunting strains of a student playing Botocini's Turandotta on the double bass. But the former embassy still remains: peeling, faded, ghostly, the beautiful Venetian tiled floors cracked, an important symbol of independence for the people of Cetinje.

This is the heart of independent Montenegro and the former capital city in the days when it was still a kingdom. Prince Nikola Petrovic-Njegos, the grandson of the last King of Montenegro, now an architect and a fierce advocate of a free Montenegro, spoke to The Times on the troubles of his country which may soon go the way of the other former Yugoslav republics, and eventually break away from Belgrade. "For ten years, we have been in the dictatorship of a nationalistic state which has prevented us from making a democratic transition and finding the way out of the old communist regime," he says. "It has forced the entire former Yugoslavia into absurd wars and it has locked them in a system of fear." He adds: "The number one problem here is Milosevic."

Prince Nikola believes that the biggest obstacle to the country's independence is President Milosevic's strength. "Because of the mistakes of the international community, Milosevic has managed to reunite the Serb people around him." Montenegro is important — it has Yugoslavia's only stretch of coastline and Mr Milosevic needs it, militarily and psychologically.

Aleksandr Bercutian, a local historian says: "We Montenegrins do not have a romantic history. We have a tragic one."

BALKANS WAR: STRATEGY

1999: HOW BELGRADE COULD IMPOSE PARTITION

Nato anticipates Serb partition ruse

Serbia's aim to retain the best of Kosovo will meet stiff opposition, writes Charles Bremner in Brussels

AS NATO grinds down Serbia's forces and facilities, the West expects President Milosevic to spring a new peace gambit based on the partition of Kosovo. This has been seen as one of his aims since the international community started taking steps to halt the onslaught against the province's ethnic Albanians two years ago.

The supposed Serbian goal would be to split Kosovo in two, leaving Belgrade in control of the northern and eastern regions that are home to the ancient monasteries and battlefields that are deemed to be the cradle of Serbian culture, as well as the province's considerable mineral and coal resources. Western suspicions of Mr Milosevic's goal have been reinforced by the pattern of the Serbian purge of Albanians, which has focused on the north and west and Pristina, the capital.

The West is not ruling out the creation of an enclave to create a haven inside southern Kosovo, but it is now highly unlikely that it would accept partition. Agreement would amount to condoning the ethnic purge and would be seen as a humiliation for Nato in its new aim of returning the Albanian Kosovars to their homeland and ridding the whole province of Serbian regular and paramilitary forces. In addition, partition along the supposed lines would leave a rump Kosovo that was economically unviable, say the experts. Belgrade would retain control over much of the wealth, including electricity production and deposits of zinc, nickel and coal that made Kosovo the richest province in terms of natural resources in the former Yugoslavia.

This would create conditions for merging with neighbouring Albania. The emergence of such a "Greater Albania" is seen as a strategic aim by Mr Milosevic as a way of sowing conflict and destabilising the Balkan region.

However, a prolonged bombing campaign and the prospect of a bloody ground war could shake Nato resolve enough to consider an offer that could cynically be passed off as a parallel to Bosnia-Herzegovina. Under the Dayton peace accords, the West effectively condoned the country's partition into a Croat-Muslim region and Serb region. According to one theory, Russia could back partition and enter the peace arrangement as a guarantor.

Planners at the United States Defence Department have already sketched the demarcation line that they believe Mr Milosevic could seek to lay down. This would run from the Albanian border east to Decani, north to the outskirts of Pec, east along the main road to Pristina and then south past Urosvac to the Macedonian border.

Belgrade would control the main road links in the province as well as access to Macedonia and rich mining areas around Kosovska Mitrovica, northwest of Pristina, according to the Pentagon theory as reported by US media.

Serbia would retain key historic sites, such as the Patriarchate of Pec, the historic seat of the Serbian Orthodox Church and the Visoki Decani monastery in Decani. It would also keep the Cracanica monastery and Kosovo Polje battlefield, southwest of Pristina, where the Serbs were defeated by the Turks in 1389. Belgrade's mythology deems this to be the birthplace of the Serbian fighting soul and it is also the place where Mr Milosevic launched his personal crusade for power in 1987. Sent by Belgrade to quell demonstrations by ethnic Serbs, he incited greater nationalism there by promising to save them from the Albanians who had achieved demographic ascendancy in the province.

In this version of the map, Serbia would lose Prizren, which has holy sites. Some experts believe Belgrade could also demand a buffer zone along the whole Albanian frontier.

In the unlikely event that the allies accepted such a deal, Belgrade could be expected to attempt to retain southern Kosovo as an autonomous province, as outlined in the now-defunct Rambouillet plan, and he would probably seek to have it policed by an international military force that included Russia and other states outside Nato.

Bomb mishap: The US Air Force has launched an inquiry after a bomb was dropped on the tarmac at RAF Fairford, Gloucestershire, yesterday as crews were loading a B1 bomber. It was not armed and did not explode. The weapon was a conventional bomb and not a cruise missile, a US spokeswoman at the base said. The area was evacuated for a time.

GERMANY GIVES DETAILS OF COVERT PLAN

Berlin: Germany yesterday revealed elements of what it said was Serbia's covert plan, Operation Horseshoe, to expel ethnic Albanians from Kosovo and said there was evidence that it had been drawn up six months before Nato began its air assault on Yugoslavia (Tony Paterson writes).

At a press conference in Bonn, Rudolf Scharping, the Defence Minister, presented photographic slides of four sketch maps containing the names of towns and villages which displayed arrows representing Serbian army and police militia units progressively encircling Kosovo in a horseshoe-shaped pincer movement.

Herr Scharping said: "Operation Horseshoe provided clear evidence that President Milosevic had long been preparing the expulsions from Kosovo and that he had simply used the time gained by the Rambouillet peace talks to organise army and police units for the campaign."

Nato faces long-term task as a protector

AT some point a substantial number of Nato troops will need to go into Kosovo. If they do not, the refugees will not go home. They might still return if the Nato forces have been rendered more acceptable to the Serbs by having neutral markings on their vehicles or by an accompaniment of Russian and Ukrainian troops. They will not go if there are only unarmed monitors to watch over them. That was the last plan and it failed.

It is not only the returning refugees who will want high-quality protection. So will the aid agencies providing assistance and all those who will be involved in the huge job of reconstruction. All this requires secure conditions.

The Rambouillet peace plan envisaged the introduction of about 28,000 troops as a protection force. Around 12,000 British, French and German troops are in Macedonia, where they have been preparing for this mission. They are currently involved in the refugee crisis.

This number was calculated with reference to the area to be covered, the nature of the terrain and internal communications, and the logistical problems. The damage inflicted by the Serb campaign against the Kosovan Albanians and the Nato campaign against the Serb units responsible may have affected the calculations but the new strategic situation involves the most important reason for a reassessment.

In the effort to get President Milosevic's signature, significant concessions were made to the Serbs — a provision for more than 5,000 Serb troops to stay in the province to patrol borders and assert sovereignty; and an undertaking that the Kosovo Liberation Army fighters would be disarmed. Even while the negotiations were going on it was not hard to imagine how skirmishes between Serbs and Albanians could give the implementation force a serious headache if it was to preserve law and order while maintaining a reputation for impartiality.

Substantial numbers of troops will be needed in Kosovo whatever the future holds, writes Lawrence Freedman

Nato demands have now been revised to require all Serb forces to leave Kosovo and it is doubtful that the disarmament of the KLA is going to be quite so high a priority. Without any Serb military units in the area the peacekeeping task would obviously be simplified.

Two new requirements suggest themselves. First, there will be need to guard the border of Kosovo against any attempt to infiltrate Serb units. Second, the remaining Serb civilians, as well as their religious and historical sites, will need protection from Albanians seeking vengeance. Many weapons have already been distributed to Serb civilians. Having been used to harass the Albanians, these weapons will come to be seen as a vital form of self-defence.

This is one of the reasons why Kosovo will have to become in effect a Nato protectorate, whatever its constitutional position as notionally part of Serbia or on the road to independence. The alliance will have responsibility for law and order, guarding the borders and overseeing the reconstruction of the country's infrastructure and the regeneration of its economy.

The new requirements may lead to changes in the composition of the protection force but they do not argue for big revisions to the proposed numbers. The basic problem for Nato planners is that existing plans all assume the force enters with Serb consent. It was Mr Milosevic's refusal to countenance the entry of Nato forces that led to the breakdown of the Rambouillet talks and remains the central issue of contention.

Before he accedes to this demand under duress, Mr Milosevic will almost certainly first offer partition. As this would probably be accompanied by a movement of Serbs out of the rump Kosovo, this would ease the requirements of a protection force. For the moment such an offer would undoubtedly be refused.

Washington: Americans are digging in for a long war which they expect to last months or even years and result in the deaths of their own soldiers (Damian Whitworth writes). Despite President Clinton's pronouncements, they believe ground troops will be sent in to try and complete the job in Kosovo and they are roughly equally divided on whether this is the right thing to do. Mr Clinton will be studying most carefully data that shows a widespread belief that Nato is unlikely to achieve its aims swiftly and by air warfare alone.

'Corridor' for US soldiers

ple for brutal nationalist purposes," the EU foreign ministry said in a statement.

However, in Brussels there were firm denials that Nato bombers had been responsible for the huge damage to civilian buildings in Pristina.

Western defence sources said that although Nato bombers had hit targets in Pristina, the attacks had been in other parts of the town and they insisted that the type of damage being shown on television would not have been the result of bombs from the air.

Intelligence sources said last week that there was evidence of Yugoslav troops placing trucks with explosives in a number of towns, to cause damage which could then be blamed on Nato bombers.

Responding to Belgrade's claim that the oppression in Kosovo had now stopped, Senor Solana said: "The information that I have at the moment very clearly indicates that military operations are continuing on the Serbian side in a dramatic way."

RAF Harriers were involved in back-to-back bombing raids over Kosovo in the hunt for Yugoslav forces in the province. After one wave had returned from a morning raid, dropping anti-personnel cluster bombs on mobile Yugoslav units, a second wave took off for a similar mission. There were also further raids on Belgrade. More than 400 Nato missions were flown in 24 hours, the alliance said.

As a boost to Nato's plan to expand its firepower in the region, the Albanian parliament yesterday approved the deployment of 24 American Apache attack helicopters to Albania.

BALKANS WAR: THE ALLIANCE

Nervous allies get appetite for war

Europe has found the stomach for a fight by marching to an American drum, writes Charles Bremner in Brussels

Serb troops on patrol on the outskirts of Pristina yesterday after a Nato airstrike. Concern about lack of resolve among allied countries has largely proved unfounded

IF NATO blundered by counting on a swift collapse by President Milosevic after a few days of bombing, the alliance can take heart from another misjudgment. This was the assumption that continental Europe had little stomach for a fight and the shakier governments would soon wobble under the pressure of public disapproval and pacifist politicians.

A disaster in the Balkans could still bring that about. Italy showed renewed signs of wavering yesterday with a suggestion that the bombing should stop soon. But for the moment, there is general relief over the resolve among allied states as the barbarity in Kosovo has rallied a revolted public behind the Nato offensive.

A decade ago, after the collapse of communism, it would have been unthinkable to imagine Paris, Bonn and Rome marching into battle on European soil under American command. Polls now show growing support for a ground campaign.

To the horror of diehard anti-imperialists in France, Germany and elsewhere, Nato's "just war", as Le Monde called it, has achieved a secondary result of reasserting American power in the old world and exposing the feebleness of the European Union as it tries to manage its own security and extend eastwards.

As the European media have turned the campaign into good guy Washington versus bad guy Belgrade, it is clear that even an incomplete and messy success for Nato will galvanise the EU into speeding British-backed plans for a homegrown defence under Nato auspices. It should also jolt the EU into toning down the internal obsessions that have sapped its desire for eastward expansion.

Old reflexes are still operating. Anti-American feeling is visible from Scandinavia to the Mediterranean and it is being fuelled by signs of supposed Yankee arrogance.

Many did not like the way President Clinton dismissed the Belgrade peace offer apparently before consulting his Nato partners.

In Germany, Chancellor Schröder faces dissent from some of his Social Democrats, while in Italy Massimo D'Alema, the Prime Minister, is under pressure from his Communist coalition partners. Greek qualms are a special case, given the country's Balkan entanglement.

But the biggest example of a Kosovo-inspired upheaval is in France, where the Gaullist President Chirac and Lionel Jospin, the Socialist Prime Minister, have thrown their weight behind Nato, sowing dismay among hardline Gaullists and old leftists alike.

M. Jospin's Green coalition partners are demanding a Nato ground offensive while the Communists, also in Government, have succumbed to old pro-Soviet instincts and are marching alongside pro-Milosevic Serbs.

Traditionalist French thinkers claim the whole Balkan war is a naked American plot, supported by British poodles, for the control of Europe. However most have fallen in behind the view — not heard in Paris since the wartime Liberation — that America has come as a necessary, although unwelcome, saviour for an impotent Europe.

Laying down new dogma yesterday, Le Nouvel Observateur, bible of the leftwing intelligentsia, thundered: "Denouncing American imperialism... shows an intellectual vacuum, the abandonment of all international ambition for France and for Europe."

Against this background, governments are trying to extract lessons and carve out a role for an EU that has been sorely eclipsed. The biggest symbol of the pecking order came ten days ago when the European Commission dutifully turned up at Nato headquarters in Brussels for a crisis session on the conflict. French feathers were ruffled by this first official collaboration between the two organisations.

The EU, which includes four non-Nato states, is trying to assert itself through humanitarian relief and with diplomatic and financial efforts to shore up the region. The Commission, enfeebled by its caretaker status, is busy with a plan to reward Macedonia with promises of jumping the queue for EU membership.

Beyond the immediate conflict, Europe is drawing one conclusion: the EU's new machinery for running a centralised EU foreign policy — due for launch this summer — will come to nothing without a full-scale military structure and the will to use it. A Nato success in Kosovo will be a big boost to Tony Blair's plan to ensure the closest of links between the American-led alliance and the EU's semi-autonomous EU defence arm.

THE BALKANS: THE REFUGEES

Troops mine frontier to cut off escape

SERB soldiers dug trenches and laid more mines along Kosovo's border with Albania yesterday to prevent any escape by the hundreds of thousands of ethnic Albanians who have been forced back from refugee convoys.

The Serbs, who pointed sniper rifles at anyone straying too near the Morine frontier, toiled at their task yesterday to keep what Nato fears are huge numbers of hostages inside Kosovo, having spent the previous week robbing, raping, and expelling them.

Nevertheless, one man escaped. Rahim Zulfaz who at 83 is too old to serve in the rebel Kosovo Liberation Army and was therefore spared death, staggered across the border in his socks. He had been walking for three days from a village close to Prizren, about 15 miles from the Morine crossing, after he got off his family's tractor to relieve himself, and was cut off as the Serbs forced the exodus of more than 260,000 people into Albania.

"My eyesight is now very bad. I could not find anyone and wandered about for a while. Then I found the road and just started walking. I had left my shoes in the trailer so I was just in socks," the retired farmer said.

He said he thought his family had reached Albania. He was resting from his ordeal in an Italian Army hospital set up for refugees but his family had still not been traced yesterday. Medical staff did not have the heart to tell him that they feared his relatives might be among the estimated 80,000 people driven back from the 15-mile queue that had been trying to cross into Albania at Morine.

At the Morine crossing point, Sam Kiley watches the Serbs try to keep in the inhabitants they had begun to drive out

Clare Short, the Secretary of State for International Development, said yesterday she feared for the lives of the remaining Kosovo Albanians. "They [the Serbs] seem now to have started rounding up refugees queuing to leave Kosovo and returning them by force. We do not know whether they have been driven back to their homes or elsewhere within Kosovo. It is not known where the refugees are and what is happening to them."

But their fate is obvious to refugees who have fled Kosovo. Milo Goranyi, who arrived at Morine four days ago before the border was closed, claimed: "They are being held in concentration camps as hostages and human shields. Milosevic needs them to defend against the attacks on his ground troops."

Mr Zulfaz described an eerie walk past thousands of vehicles that had been abandoned. He spent two nights sleeping in cars that he said had been left "in a hurry" with plenty of blankets inside.

Some of the vehicles, such as tractors and buses, had been destroyed by Serbs who were ordered to end the expulsion of Kosovo's Albanians. The Serbian leader's policy is clearly now to hold captive the remaining Kosovo Albanians since they represent his best defence against tank-busting A10 aircraft and helicopter gunships.

Mr Zulfaz said: "When I got to the border the guards said I should not leave because the shooting had stopped in Kosovo. They said I should go home. I did not tell them that would be a waste of time because they had burnt it down. I just said I wanted to see my family who were in Albania. They gave me a glass of water and wished me luck."

Yesterday Sadako Ogata, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, said she was "very, very worried" after a visit to a refugee camp at Kukes in northern Albania.

Kosovo refugees reach out to receive bread yesterday at a temporary holding camp in an old factory on the outskirts of Kukes in Albania. The exodus of refugees has stopped since the Serb authorities sealed the borders, prompting fears that they may be used as human shields.

Plight of missing thousands worries refugee agencies

FROM DANIEL MCGRORY IN SKOPJE

AID agencies were still trying to discover last night what had become of thousands of refugees forcibly evicted from Macedonia's borders.

While the UN searched for 10,000 they say are unaccounted for, Nato is concerned about up to 60,000 refugees forced back into Kosovo by the Serbs in the past 48 hours. Javier Solana, the Nato Secretary-General, is among many who fear these families may be used as human shields.

Most of Kosovo's borders remained sealed yesterday. Nato admitted that those repatriated were "beyond our reach". If thousands are trapped in Kosovo at gunpoint it will reinvigorate the argument for ground troops to be sent from Macedonia and Albania.

Serb border troops could be seen laying new minefields yesterday just beyond the frontier, beside some of the cars abandoned by families who were made to retrace their tracks to homes they fear have been burnt or seized.

In Macedonia a grotesque game of hide-and-seek was being played last night as the Skopje Government and aid agencies squabbled over the numbers bussed away in darkness from the squalid transit camp at Blace. The Red Cross and the UNHCR believe that between 27,000 and 30,000 had been held there.

The Skopje authorities claim there were 15,000 at most. About 7,000, they say, are in Albania, camping in a sports stadium. About the same number, they claim, are still inside Macedonia, including 2,000 sent to the Brazda refugee run by British troops.

Nato commanders there say they only received three busloads on the night of the Blace deportation.

A senior UNHCR official said: "Anyone who witnessed the scene at Blace can see there were up 30,000 on that riverbank. We want to know where all these people are."

As neither the UN nor Nato was allowed to register those trapped at the frontier, there is no way of knowing for sure. A UNHCR spokesman said:

"We have still not received a single name of any of those expelled from Blace. What we know from those who are accounted for is that their families were separated."

UNHCR officials in Greece said last night that a convoy of buses carrying 2,000 refugees arrived at the southern border of Macedonia and was turned away. They believe the buses were diverted to Albania.

They fear those unaccounted for may be being kept at makeshift camps closer to the Albanian border where the Macedonians want all the refugees to go.

Macedonian officials say they made it clear that they could accept no more refugees. Thomir Ilievski, of the Foreign Ministry, said: "A third of the Bosnian refugees we took in have never gone home. We are not a rich country and this many ethnic Albanians would cause unrest."

He also criticised Nato's part in the exodus, saying "these airstrikes provoked some of these people to flee Kosovo. We took them away at night because the roads were quieter so we could make their journey easier."

Last night Nato was using its surveillance planes to monitor the drift of refugees back to Kosovo. Monitors from the OSCE who have spoken to some of their local staff trapped inside Kosovo report that they were turned back from the borders by the Serbs who said as the operation against the KLA had ended it was safe for them to go home.

"Can you imagine anyone who stood on a road for eight days trusting someone who forced them out of their homes?" a spokesman said.

Pregnant women told wine is worse than cigarettes

WOMEN who drink a glass of wine each day during their pregnancy could be doing more harm to their babies than if they smoke, according to research published in Belfast yesterday.

The study suggests that a woman who drinks between five and seven units of alcohol a week risks damaging the central nervous system of her child.

The research, carried out by the Foetal Behavioural Centre at the Royal Maternity Hospital in Belfast, found that a baby's brain stem was more adversely affected by alcohol than cigarettes. The findings will come as a shock to many women, who have been repeatedly warned of cigarettes during pregnancy but told that an occasional glass of wine would not do their foetus any harm.

Jenny Little, a researcher at the centre, said that her findings undermined the traditional medical wisdom that a little alcohol would not harm a developing baby.

She tested the startle reaction, or sudden movement of the arms, in 129 unborn babies aged 25 weeks. She found that the foetuses of many women who drank did not react to the buzzer stimulus placed on the mother's stomach. Most babies of women who did not drink reacted within the required 4.5 seconds.

She tested women in four categories: women who drank and smoked, women who smoked but did not drink, women who drank but did not smoke, and a control group of women who neither drank nor smoked. In the control group, 70 per cent of babies had developed the startle reaction by 25 weeks and reacted to the stimulus. Ms Little said that it was perfectly normal that the remaining 30 per cent of foetuses would develop the startle reaction at a later date.

But only 42.1 per cent of babies of women who drank reacted, compared with 55 per cent of the foetuses of women who smoked. The unborn children of women who smoked and drank fared worst, with only 37.5 per cent of unborn babies reacting to the buzzing sound. Ms Little said: "I think more information is needed and more health promotion campaigns against drinking alcohol during pregnancy."

She said that she was uncertain of the long-term effects of alcohol on the children after birth as they scored normally in all tests carried out on newborn babies. She added that it was possible, however, that a baby showing no startle reaction in the womb at 25 weeks could suffer cognitive and behavioural difficulties when it was older.

"We need more research carried out on this. In the United States women are told not to drink any alcohol during pregnancy."

The Foetal Behavioural Centre, which is linked to the psychology department of Queen's University in Belfast, has also examined the foetal movements of unborn babies suffering spina bifida. The research carried out shows that some kinds of spina bifida lesions would benefit from being operated on while the baby is still in the womb.

Milk and honey: Rachel Rowlands has turned a kitchen hobby into a multimillion-pound organic dairy business

Yoghurt pots a fortune for organic farm

By VALERIE ELLIOTT

AN ORGANIC farmer who used up spare milk to make yoghurt and cream has turned her kitchen hobby into a multimillion-pound organic dairy business.

Rachel Rowlands is now hoping to do for organic yoghurt what Laura Ashley did for flower-printed cotton. But the success of Rachel's Dairy is all because of a freak of nature. A snowstorm in 1982 prevented tankers from collecting Guernsey milk from her 250-acre Brynlllys farm at Borth, near Aberystwyth.

Mrs Rowlands refused to pour her milk down the drain. Instead, she hunted out her grandmother's old butter churn and separator and set to work.

"It took ten days for the tankers to get to us so I made the yoghurts and cream and gave the skimmed milk to the cows. I approached some local shops and hotels with the produce and they all wanted more."

From a few dozen pots a week in 1982, which brought in some £5,000 a year, Mrs Rowlands is now producing 25,000 pots a day with a £3 million annual turnover.

Yesterday, a multimillion-pound deal with Horizon, America's main organic dairy producer, put Rachel's Dairy on track to expand with more organic dairy processing plants near organic farms around the country.

They hope to expand into new markets throughout Europe and Mrs Rowlands hopes that her business will persuade more farmers to return to organic techniques.

"We want to help to bring more jobs to the countryside and for farmers to convert to organic techniques," she said.

"There is still a lot of reluctance to do so, though. They think if everyone does it there won't be a market. But we are only using 3.5 million litres of milk a year. We want that to go to five million in a year and 20 million in the years ahead."

The farm, first owned by her grandmother and then by her mother, Dinah Williams, now 88, has been a leading exponent of organic farming. Mrs Williams was convinced that she should stick to traditional farming techniques after a chance meeting with Lady Eve Balfour, a founder member of the Soil Association, in 1948.

Mrs Rowlands, 52, and her husband, Gareth, 54, continued the trend and realised that people were concerned about the origins of their food and how it was produced. They opened up their farm and allowed people to see what they did and how the animals were treated.

The couple refused to say how much they had made on the deal. Mrs Rowlands said, however, that they and their three children had gained security: "We will feel comfortable and relaxed. Don't listen to anyone who says hard work does not pay. We took many risks over the years and we put our farm as collateral to get the factory."

The couple will be consultants to the firm. Mrs Rowlands has a seat on the board and her son John, 32, will be operations manager of the company in Britain — so far a factory in Aberystwyth with a staff of 48, but they hope to double the business within five years.

Other processing plants are also planned, possibly in Cornwall and Lancashire.

When the bride wore red

By PHILIP HOWARD

IN Ancient Greece, a bride wore a veil that marked her out as an object of importance. Her modern sister 25 centuries later wears one for the same purpose.

Lloyd Llewellyn-Jones, of the University of Wales, yesterday gave a paper to the Classical Association, meeting in Liverpool, on the wedding customs his research has uncovered. The few ancient texts that speak of the wedding veil call its colour "krokos". This is usually translated as yellow, like the bulb we call a crocus. But ancient colour-words are problematic.

Mr Llewellyn-Jones thinks that the Greek veil was not yellow, but red. He argues that it was a metaphor for the hymen. In most "veil societies" red veils are still worn at marriage rituals. There may be a connection between the colour and the blood of the bride supposed to be released at first intercourse.

In some modern weddings the bride is unveiled at the end of the ceremony with the exhortation to the groom, "you may now kiss the bride". The bride was also unveiled at an Ancient Greek wedding. But Mr Llewellyn-Jones believes that her unveiling was a rite of debasement.

The unveiling happened at the home of the bride, before she was led off, veiled again, to the groom's house in the ancient equivalent of a stretch limo festooned with white ribbons.

Prince visits old man of the islands

Donald McKillop with the Prince on TV and, below, with wife Gloria: he has turned down lucrative deals

The Prince of Wales among young shinty players yesterday on Berneray, where he had returned to open a £6 million causeway

Gillian Harris and Alan Hamilton on a reunion in the Hebrides

THE Prince of Wales took time off from official duties in the Outer Hebrides yesterday to visit the old friend who taught him about crofting. Donald McKillop was his host for a private visit 12 years ago when he retreated to the island of Berneray to try the simple farming life.

The Prince has the title Lord of the Isles. Mr McKillop has the nickname Splash, which he says derives from a childhood habit of walking in puddles, although other islanders insist it refers to the amount of water he puts in a glass of whisky. Their latest reunion came as the Prince travelled to Berneray to open a £6.6 million causeway linking the tiny island to North Uist.

The Prince first knew of Berneray from the Royal Family's traditional Western Isles summer cruise in the Royal Yacht Britannia. Shortly after his marriage, he landed on the island from the yacht with the Princess of Wales. By 1987 his marriage was in virtual ruins and he was spending more and more time alone in Scotland. He asked to experience the crofting life, both as a farmer himself at Highgrove and a king in waiting anxious to meet his ordinary future subjects. Mr McKillop was chosen as a typical crofter, growing arable crops and potatoes and rearing sheep.

The Prince was a guest for five days, living in the cottage with the crofter and his Australian wife Gloria, a retired nurse. During his visit the Prince helped to build a drystone wall, planted potatoes, dipped sheep and fished for prawn and lobster in a creel boat, hauling in the lines like an experienced deckhand. He also attended a local funeral and tried cutting peat on neighbouring North Uist. According to friends, he fell in love with the crofting lifestyle and went home with his developing interest in organic farming firmly reinforced.

So discreet are the islanders that the Prince's 1987 visit to Berneray remained a secret until it was over. He returned to the island in 1991 to make a television documentary with the presenter Selina Scott, but since then had not been back until yesterday. After the programme, a Prince

Among Islands, was shown, Mr McKillop was inundated with requests from restaurants wanting to buy potatoes, known locally as Prince Charles, from the "Prince's croft" but, despite the lucrative deals on offer, the crofter refused.

Mr McKillop, now 67, still runs his croft, although he has given up arable crops and it is a long time since he went out in his own fishing boat. Since his wife Gloria retired from the health service, they have run a bed and breakfast business from their home.

The Prince arrived more than an hour late yesterday due to high winds. He recalled drinking a concoction of whisky and liqueur when he was last on the island. "I discovered what a 'rusty nail' is, and I am not sure that it did anything for my brain. However I am hoping for another one later," he said. He met most of the island's 130 population in the community hall, and later had a private meeting with the McKillops.

The Prince was already well-informed on farming before his 1987 stay. During the 1970s he had absorbed the ideas of sustainable agriculture promoted in Fritz Schumacher's book Small Is Beautiful. When he began to take a hands-on approach to running the Duchy of Cornwall, he was persuaded of the merits of organic farming by its then secretary, Sir John Higgs. He began an intensive programme of visiting Duchy tenant farmers, which included spending a full week on a Dartmoor hill farm, which produced a memorable picture of him milking a cow.

The island celebrated the Prince's visit with a shinty festival and an informal buffet in the church hall. Before officially opening the half-mile long causeway, which replaces a ten-minute ferry crossing, the Prince visited Chearsabhaig Arts Centre in Lochmaddy, North Uist, and the town's refurbished medical centre.

The Prince had also been hoping to declare the causeway open in Gaelic, but that had to be abandoned, because there was no time to rehearse with any of the Gaelic-speaking islanders.

British TV 'too morose for foreign tastes'

BRITISH television shows are considered too "gritty, dark and socio-political" by many foreign channels, a government-backed report said yesterday.

Home-made drama, in particular, is regarded as "non-escapist" and bleak, while our comedies are often incomprehensible to an overseas audience because of their reliance on social nuance.

Television stations in other countries believe many programmes to be too "intrinsically British" and morose, the study says. The French channel M6, for example, rejected Prime Suspect, the crime drama starring Helen Mirren, giving as its reason: "British stuff is so realistic. It doesn't necessarily mean that it is violent, but it is dark, drugs, sex — not always graphic violence, but it is just pervasive."

A spokesman for Canale 5 in Italy said: "Television should be about entertainment and escapism. We do not want to watch a programme that deals with the same problems that you face in the day."

Part of Britain's problem would appear to be the climate, according to the report. It says that the Australian soap opera Home and Away "captured teenage and young family audiences all over Europe by portraying a destination that many Europeans find attractive: an open, young country with a sunshine life-style." By contrast, it says, "an old country like Britain will lose out if it, too, cannot portray itself as a fictional destination which audiences elsewhere can enjoy."

The report, jointly commissioned by the Department for Culture, Media and Sport and British media companies, said that the British sitcom was considered to be in decline by foreign buyers. At recent screenings, ITV's Holding the Baby, starring Nick Hancock, was described by buyers as "lacking real spirit, very dull".

Keeping Up Appearances, the BBC's highly popular comedy about a middle-England social climber, has been successful overseas. But the report says: "Hyacinth Bouquet... is seen abroad exclusively as a bossy, overbearing woman, not as a snob or social climber."

Thankfully, other elements of the comedy mean that the show is successful anyway."

Chris Smith, the Culture Secretary, yesterday launched an inquiry into the broadcasting market to improve Britain's export of programmes in the next century.

Mr Smith said the British television industry was running a £272 million trade deficit, partly because of the high prices paid for Hollywood films, American imports such as Friends and the introduction of multi-channel television in recent years.

The report, written by the media consultants David Graham and Associates, and backed by such bodies as BBC Worldwide, the commercial arm of the BBC, Granada Media International and Pearson Television, said that the British television industry tended to be "self-sufficient and insular" and had not made the best of co-production deals and overseas programme sales.

Britain is, nevertheless, the second-biggest exporter of programmes in the world after America, although the British share of the export market is 8 per cent compared with America's 72 per cent.

Among those programmes that perform well in foreign markets are the crime drama Cracker, Teletubbies, Top of the Pops and Benny Hill. Britain also has a good record for exports of high-quality science, history and wildlife programmes, and for developing entertainment formats that can be adapted for audiences abroad such as Cilla Black's Surprise, Surprise and Ready, Steady Cook.

Benny Hill's seaside-postcard humour still sells well abroad, but situation comedies struggle to find foreign fans

The report recommends that the Government should consider relaxing the regulation of domestic broadcasters to enable them to compete more successfully abroad, consider giving tax breaks to encourage investment in original programme production, and that a single trade body such as the British Television Distributors Association should act as a focus for exports.

Mr Smith praised the high quality of British programming, and said that broadcasters should not dilute the unique Britishness of programmes simply to cater to foreign tastes. "What we must not end up doing is making the tail wag the dog," he said.

The report came after the announcement that Coronation Street has been sold for broadcast in the US for the first time. Rupert Gavin, chief executive of BBC Worldwide, said: "The BBC has a positive balance of trade in programme exports of £22 million in 1997-78 and constitutes about half of all UK exports."

"However, the marketplace is increasingly competitive and we have had to find innovative ways of meeting those challenges."

Hospital drama link to suicide attempts

By Helen Rumble

SUICIDAL viewers mimic the medical emergencies they see on television hospital dramas such as Casualty and ER, a study has found.

In the week after a paracetamol overdose was shown on Casualty, hospitals saw up to 20 per cent more cases of overdose with the drug.

It is the first time that television drama has been shown to affect suicide rates in Britain, according to the author of the report, Keith Hawton, Professor of Psychiatry at Oxford University.

The findings, published in the British Medical Journal, raised serious issues about whether suicide should be dramatised, he said. Potential suicides seemed to take note of the drug used, with overdose patients who had seen the Casualty episode twice as likely to take paracetamol as those who did not.

Researchers monitored the effects on hospital admissions of an episode of Casualty in which an RAF pilot arrives in hospital two days after taking 50 paracetamol. The 49 hospitals checked recorded an average rise of 17 per cent in paracetamol overdoses, and a 9 per cent rise in overdoses using other drugs, in the next week.

A spokeswoman for Casualty, a Saturday primetime show on BBC1, said details of suicides were shown in the interests of realism.

Duck in Bath holds up £15m millennium plan

By a Correspondent

BEATRICE the broody duck is causing problems in the Roman spa city of Bath by holding up a £15 million millennium lottery project.

Council chiefs want to restore a 2,000-year-old hot-spring bathing pool but the maternally-minded mallard has built a nest beside the famous Cross Bath and started laying eggs. While Beatrice nonchalantly warms its clutch, a row has hatched over how and when to move the bird out of the way.

Under the Wildlife and Countryside Act a wild bird's nest may not be disturbed without a special licence.

Voluntary workers looking after the bath firmly believe that the duck should be left in peace.

Members of the Springs' Foundation said they were horrified at a suggestion to call in experts from the Wetlands and Wildlife Trust at Slimbridge to move Beatrice. But Bath and North East Somerset council wants the duck evicted quickly so that preliminary tests can start and heavy plant moved onto the site.

The Roman bath where the ducks have set up home

The baths were closed to bathers in the 1970s. They fell into disrepair but were always open for the public to view. In 1991 the voluntary Springs' Foundation was formed to maintain and restore the baths. The group turned the Cross Bath into an open-air sanctuary where people could sit and relax in quiet contemplation.

Project leaders want Beatrice out of the way so that they can start tests to determine whether the spring water can be made safe for bathing and drinking again.

But the council cannot carry out the tests while the duck and its mate, Arthur, or any other ducks are present because their faeces contaminate the readings.

The six-week deadline for moving in heavy plant equipment is just about the time that the duck would be ready to hatch its eggs — unless it is evicted.

Margaret Stewart, spokeswoman for the foundation, said some staff were prepared to barricade themselves in to prevent Beatrice being driven out and separated from the eggs.

Animal activists were thought to be involved earlier this year when netting over the pool — to stop regular visitor Beatrice getting in — was slashed.

But on Easter Monday the devious duck allegedly hopped up and down on a joint until it gave way and slipped through the £2,000 replacement netting and into the bath.

Rhodri Samuel, co-ordinator of the Bath Spa revival project, said the problem had been foreseen as the recalcitrant duck had previously nested in the bath.

He said: "We want the duck out. But obviously we would not do anything to harm the bird."

● New inquiry into profits ● Concern at 'barrier' to competitors Are superstores cheating you?

BY ROBIN YOUNG

AN INQUIRY into charges of profiteering and anti-competitive practices by supermarkets has raised issues that merit further investigation, the Office of Fair Trading said yesterday.

John Bridgeman, Director-General of Fair Trading, said his office's nine-month inquiry into the £60 billion supermarket business had been "inconclusive". As a result, the Competition Commission, formerly the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, has been given at least another year to report to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on whether supermarkets enjoy too much monopoly power and make excessive profits.

The OFT examined the profits of the four largest supermarket chains — Tesco, Sainsbury, Safeway and Asda — over a five-year period from 1993 to 1998. The study took data from 1,630 stores and included an independent evaluation of land and buildings.

Mr Bridgeman said: "After analysing the profits of the four largest supermarket chains using a range of conventional and specialist economic measures, I have to conclude

NO. OF STORES	TURNOVER 1998 (est. YAT)	OPERATING PROFIT 1998	OPERATING MARGIN 1998 (%)	MARKET CAPITALISATION	SHARE OF MARKET (From Verdict Research)
Asda 222	£7,619m	£414m	5.4	£4,493m	4.9%
J Sainsbury 381	£15,496m	£801m	5.2	£7,342m	9.6%
Safeway 468	£6,979m	£427m	6.1	£2,789m	6.8%
Somerfield 1,490	£6,056m	£187m	3.1	£1,571m	6.7%
Tesco 600	£16,175m	£882m	5.5	£10,751m	9.3%
Waitrose 90	£2,278m	£147m	6.5	£2,267m	1.2%
Carrefour (France) 937	£18,437m (estimate)	£700m (estimate)	3.8 (estimate)	£17,381m
Metro (Germany) 474	£32,465m (estimate)	£515m (estimate)	1.6 (estimate)	£14,817m that there is a level of profitability here that requires further investigation by the Competition Commission."

Mr Bridgeman said the most important issue was the nature and extent of barriers to new competitors entering the sector. Other areas of concern included the impact of land prices on costs; the intensity of price competition at local, regional and national levels; and the nature of relationships between the supermarkets and their suppliers, including agricultural producers.

"I believe there are now significant barriers to new competitors in high-volume grocery retailing in Britain," Mr Bridgeman said. "Sites for new stores are dwindling and this gives the existing stores an advantage. Planning delays, site development costs and the ability of the largest stores to outbid smaller rivals add to the problem. This should not be seen as criticism of planning policy, it is simply to state the fact that there are significant barriers to entry and they limit the impact new competitors could be expected to have on the behaviour of the current main players."

'I have to conclude that there is a level of profitability here that requires further investigation'

He was not satisfied that competition between existing retailers was effective. "I am concerned that grocery prices are often set to match competitors rather than to undercut them, particularly in catchment areas where consumers have a limited choice of supermarkets. I have had concerns for some time that the supermarkets' power may become exploitative and the many responses from suppliers during our inquiry suggests that it is something which needs to be looked at."

The Consumers' Association welcomed the announcement. A spokesman said: "Consumer and competition issues in the supermarket sector are extremely complex and there is an urgent need for an informed public debate. There does appear to be evidence that the supermarkets have not been passing savings on to the consumer."

Spokesmen for the big supermarket chains said the decision came as no surprise. Safeway said: "We welcome the opportunity to clear the air and are confident that we will get a good result." David Reid, Tesco's deputy chairman, said: "The Competition Commission will find we champion the consumers' cause."

Janet Nunn, director of food and drink at the British Retail Consortium, which represents 90 per cent of retailers, said the referral would allow retailers to prove the sector was competitive and that customers were reaping the benefits.

A handful of food retailers control almost 50 per cent of the £87 billion-a-year food market, and some retail analysts allege that this has led to the formation of an anti-competitive cartel.

Critics claim that the main chains, including Tesco and Sainsbury, which produced pre-tax profits of more than £1.5 billion between them last year, charge more for goods in areas where they face less competition. Asda is the only major multiple retailer to operate a national price policy. The supermarkets say that the sector is fiercely competitive and that their profits are not out of line with international standards.

A previous OFT investigation of supermarkets in the early 1990s eventually concluded that the companies had no case to answer.

NEWS IN BRIEF

M25 murder trio win new appeal

Three men jailed for life for the murder of a motorist on the M25 and a series of robberies will have their cases referred back to the Court of Appeal, the Criminal Cases Review Commission said yesterday. One of the men's solicitors disclosed that a key witness at their trial was paid £10,000 by a national newspaper and £300 by the police.

Michael Davis, Randolph Johnson and Raphael Rowe, known as the M25 Three, were jailed at the Old Bailey for a series of attacks one night in December 1988, including the murder of Peter Hurburgh. He was dragged from his car at gunpoint and beaten, which led to him suffering a fatal heart attack. The accused had an appeal against conviction dismissed by the Court of Appeal in 1993.

Breast doctor resigns

A doctor who was at the centre of a breast screening scandal has resigned after seeing an advance copy of an official report. John Brennan, a consultant radiologist, was in charge of breast screening at the Royal Devon and Exeter Hospital, which failed to identify 24 cancer cases. Dr Brennan resigned within hours of reading the final report by a disciplinary panel into the case, in which nine patients died. In a statement he rejected criticism in the report of his clinical competence.

Wildfowling WW2 bomb empties pier

Hundreds of visitors were led to safety from Britain's longest seaside pier yesterday after fishermen dredged up an unexploded World War Two mine half a mile off the beach. Police ordered a full-scale evacuation of the crowded pier at Southend, Essex, when the unexploded mine was brought to the surface in the nets of a fishing boat. Seafront roads were closed to traffic while an army bomb disposal team was called in from Colchester garrison, 40 miles away.

Mobile phone review

Radiation watchdogs are to take a new look at the health effects of mobile phones. The inquiry was launched yesterday by Tessa Jowell, Minister for Public Health, after evidence from Bristol University that mobile phones may cause localised brain heating. Ms Jowell asked the National Radiological Protection Board to review all the research. "There has been no consistent evidence suggesting risk to health but there is continuing concern about the possibility," she said.

Not so super highway

Two thirds of Britons have never used the Internet or sent electronic mail, according to a survey by NOP. The West Country has the lowest Internet usage at fewer than one in four people. The greatest usage was in London, where three out of five have used it at some stage. Only 23 per cent of those questioned could define the Internet as a global computer network. The study showed that just under 50 per cent of men had used the Internet, against 34 per cent of women.

Loyalty comes at a price

BY ROBIN YOUNG

SOME surveys have claimed to show that basic food items can be up to 40 per cent more expensive in this country than in the rest of Europe or the United States, but like-for-like comparisons are notoriously difficult.

Other surveys have claimed to show that basic food items are cheaper in Britain than in France or Belgium. The supermarkets say that there cannot be much dissatisfaction with shops as consistently well-served as theirs.

Most recent figures give Tesco with 16 per cent of market share, Sainsbury 13 per cent, and Asda 6 per cent. Safeway has recently lost ground but Somerfield, the fifth-largest company, exceeded expectations at the beginning of this year by doubling its interim profits and showing a 3.4 per cent increase in like-for-like sales.

Discount chains have not had great success in Britain but they are a lively section of the market, credited with having some effect in reducing the big companies' profit margins.

Kwik-Save, which was the leader in the field, was forced to merge with Somerfield when faced with rapidly diminishing market share, and has been rebranded with higher prices and better-quality stock.

The heaviest discounters are Aldi, Netto and Lidl, German and Danish companies with about 250 stores each and an estimated total market share of 3 per cent. In a recent survey, a fifth of shoppers said they had used discount stores and rated them best on price.

Morrisons, the northern chain whose customers rate it well for price and quality, is seeking to expand. There are also convenience store operators trying to make inroads by opening 24 hours in the hope of attracting customers who are keener to avoid queues than to minimise bills.

Few consumers show loyalty to any particular supermarket. One in four shoppers told researchers that they would prefer to shop somewhere other than the store they used for their main food supplies.

Many have loyalty cards for more than one supermarket chain, and a fifth of shoppers said that price was the most important factor in choosing a supermarket.

Allergy sufferers urge more caution on food

BY CHRISTINE MIDDAP

JOHN PAGE thought that a cheese and cress sandwich could not possibly ignite his body's severe reaction to shellfish. But just as he was about to take a bite, the caution of the allergy sufferer overcame him and he checked inside the sandwich. He found three prawns — enough to cause a serious allergic reaction.

Stories of carelessness in some parts of the food industry were given by 28 teenagers with life-threatening allergies who met in London yesterday. Mr Page, 18, of Chingford, said: "You look at food that should be perfectly safe but you think that you can't eat it in case a prawn has got in there. There can be quite a lot of cross-contamination."

The results of food contamination or incorrect labelling can be fatal. In Britain last year a 19-year-old died after eating a takeaway curry that contained nuts, even though he had asked for a nut-free dish. A 36-year-old West Yorkshire woman died in 1987 after eating airline food that contained nuts.

Sometimes the allergy trigger is less easy to spot than a prawn. Teenagers yesterday said that food cooked in oil, such as chips, could also produce a reaction if other food containing nuts had already been cooked in the oil.

In people allergic to nuts, even body lotions and shampoo can cause a reaction because they can contain nut oil. David Reading, director of the Anaphylaxis [severe allergic reaction] Association, said: "Things have improved tremendously in the past few years and pre-packaged foods are pretty good in terms of labelling." But he said restaurants and takeaway foods could still cause problems. "If you eat in a restaurant you have to be pretty direct and ask questions... you have to say that if you eat nuts, for instance, it could kill you."

Women jockeys fail punter in long run

After a decade, gambler looks set to lose chance of £128,000 from novelty bet, reports Paul Wilkinson

AN UNLIKELY bet made a decade ago seems doomed to fail at the starting line of the Grand National this weekend. Only a late run by a woman jockey can bring Ray Woodcock his long-prized £128,000 winnings.

For a total stake of £400, he bet that by the millennium Cliff Richard would receive a knighthood, a British heavy-weight would win a world title and a woman would ride a National winner. The first two came through, bringing him £11,000. Lennox Lewis took the WBC heavyweight championship in 1992, and the Queen created Sir Cliff in her birthday honours four years ago. Unfortunately for Mr Woodcock, woman jockeys have let him down. Their best result in the National was in 1994 when Rosemary Henderson, a 51-year-old amateur, came fifth on her own horse, the 100-1 outsider Fiddlers Pike. Last night, when tomorrow's 32 riders were declared, there was not a woman in sight.

Even the offer of a £50,000 share of his winnings to a trainer or owner prepared to give a woman jockey a chance failed to find a taker.

Under the event's rules, a late replacement can be named up to 45 minutes before the start through injury or other emergency. Mr Woodcock, 55, a civil engineer from Halifax, West Yorkshire, said: "I'm desperate. At the time I placed the bet there were a few lady jockeys who were quite good and I thought it was only a matter of time. Time is running out and I really don't think there will be a lady jockey, but if someone takes up my offer it will certainly make the race a lot more interesting."

His wife, Gwen, 50, said: "He is a very good gambler who rarely loses because he is so scientific. We will all be watching and hoping on Saturday but I don't think it will come off in the end."

Ladbrokes gave Mr Woodcock odds of 4-1 against Cliff Richard's knighthood, 10-1 against a British world heavy-weight champion and 33-1 against a woman National winner in a combination of doubles and a treble. They agreed to pay if any two happened before 2000, and more if all three occurred. A spokesman said: "Nobody has got so close on a novelty bet to winning this amount of money. This bet is uniquely diverse in the history of British off-course bookmaking."

Woodcock offered a £50,000 share of win

Of the country's 214 licensed professional jump jockeys, only four are women and only one, Sophia Mitchell, has ridden the 15 winners on British courses necessary to qualify for the National. She said: "I would jump at the chance to ride in the National, but I don't think I will be holding my breath waiting for an offer to come. I am riding at Hereford that afternoon and Wolverhampton in the evening, but if I did get an offer of a ride in the National I think I'd somehow get there. However, I don't think it is likely. Riders in the National will have ridden their mounts on a number of previous occasions and know them well. Barring a late injury, no one gets a National ride out of the blue."

Mitchell, 26, who lives near the racing stable centre of Lambourn in Berkshire, has ridden 39 winners, including one on the flat, since she turned professional four years ago. At 5ft 1in and only 7st 12oz, many trainers regard her as too light for an endurance event such as the 4½-mile Grand National. "Many trainers still believe we are not strong enough for riding over fences. I totally disagree. After all, women are among the best all over the world in other equine events like eventing and showjumping."

National was off three years before history books say

By Russell Jenkins, North West Correspondent

A UNIVERSITY librarian has upset historians of the Grand National with a claim that the famous steeplechase came under starter's orders three years earlier than is thought. John Pinfold also claims that Captain Becher should be remembered as the winning jockey of the first race as well as for taking cover under the brook that bears his name.

The honours board for the Aintree course records the first winner of the Grand National as Lottery on February 26, 1839. The race, then called the Grand Liverpool Steeplechase, is widely accepted as the first real National. It was preceded by two races at nearby Maghull.

However, Mr Pinfold, 46, librarian of Rhodes House, Oxford, begs to differ after spending six years on research at the British Library and the Picton Library in Liverpool. He claims in a book that the first Grand National took place three years earlier and that the two races at Maghull actually took place at Aintree.

According to the revised version, the first Grand National was run on February 29, 1836, and was won by The Duke, owned by Mr Sirdefield, the landlord of the George pub in Crosby.

The winning jockey was Captain Becher, who went on to fame, if not fortune, three years later. Mr Pinfold, who says he used only original sources for his research, believes that Captain Becher should now be accorded his rightful place in the history books. He said: "I hope the authorities will amend the official record accordingly."

The author unveiled his book, Gallant Sport: The Authentic History of Liverpool Races and the Grand National (Pottery Press, £26), at Aintree to a flutter of irritation from those authorities.

Reg Green, who wrote the accepted history, A Race Apart, is in no doubt that his rival's theories are wrong. "Don't you think if Captain Becher had won the first-ever Grand National his family would have mentioned it?" he said. "The facts are that there was a steeplechase at Aintree in 1836 won by The Duke, but no way could that be called a Grand National."

Nigel Payne, an Aintree official, said: "I have no problem with 1839. We have absolutely no reason to dispute it. The early races were simply not Grand Nationals."

While Downing Street insists that Mr Blair is the party's biggest asset in Scotland... there is also a hostility among many voters who believe he should stay out of Scottish affairs. Neil MacKenzie, a taxi driver from Inverness where Mr Blair avoided doing a walkabout, said: "Donald Dewar says his party is not run by London Labour but it so, why is Tony Blair up campaigning? Whar's he doing here when there are more pressing problems like Kosovo to deal with?"

Charles Kennedy will be the main speaker at the Liberal Democrats' press conference in Edinburgh. Gordon Brown, the Chancellor, will talk in Glasgow for Labour. These are heady days for the Scottish Tories. Freed of the responsibility that goes with power, or even the distant prospect of it, they feel able to say almost anything, even if it means abandoning ideas that were once sacrosanct. "The status quo is not an option," said one candidate briskly.

Cot collapse caused death of baby girl

BY ALEX O'CONNELL

THE collapse of a cot from Mothercare was to blame for the death of a nine-month-old baby, an inquest has been told. Alexandra Harvey choked to death when the side of her cot fell across her neck as she played in it.

The girl was found unconscious by her mother, Catherine, who had left her to prepare breakfast. The baby had stopped breathing and was blue in the face, and her mother tried to revive her before the ambulance took her to hospital. The baby was transferred to a specialist unit at Addenbrooke's Hospital in Cambridge, 50 miles away, and put on a life-support machine. After six days the doctors told the mother that there was no chance of recovery and the machine was switched off.

The cot, a £79.99 Epsom model, had been bought by Miss Harvey's parents when their daughter was pregnant, the inquest was told.

It was assembled by the child's father, Robert Smith, 25, who works in a timber yard. He carefully followed the instructions for putting together the flat-pack.

The inquest, in Colchester on Wednesday, heard from an expert witness — Laurence Liff, of ICE Ergonomics — who told the coroner that the collapse of the cot had been nothing to do with way it had been assembled. He said it was principally because of a design fault that meant it was not strong enough to stay together under the weight of the baby.

The self-assembly cot conforms to safety standards

Mothercare, which was represented by a lawyer at the inquest, was not called to give evidence.

The coroner, Malcolm Weir, recorded a verdict of accidental death. "We are not here to apportion blame for the tragic incident but to find out the facts behind Alexandra's death. All I can do is let the manufacturers of the product know of the facts of this case and leave the ball in their park," Dr Weir said.

Miss Harvey, 21, said yesterday, after the inquest: "I want everyone to be aware of the dangers. What happened to my beloved daughter can happen to someone else's baby."

"I wouldn't want any other mother to go through the agony I have been through: her death has destroyed me."

Miss Harvey added: "Bob knew what he was doing and it was perfectly straightforward. I had chosen that particular cot because Mothercare have a good reputation and the cot had a British Standards Institution Kitemark."

"The instructions on the best-selling cot said it was suitable for children up to four years old or a weight of up to 18 kilograms (39lb). 'Alex was much smaller and lighter than that," said Miss Harvey, who has not received an apology from Mothercare.

The Coroner's Officer, Ian Hunter, said yesterday: "The cot complied to the British standard. If the British standard isn't satisfactory, that's another matter."

Mothercare said in a statement: "The outcome of tests concluded that the circumstances surrounding the death of Alexandra Harvey appear to be consistent with the explanation that was provided by her parents."

"It would seem that a series of unfortunate factors came together to produce a tragic result, the death of a baby, with no one person or factor to blame. Mothercare's thoughts are with Alexandra's parents at this very difficult time."

The firm said the cot conformed to safety standards and that trading standards officers had been involved in the inquiry into the death and were taking no further action.

Mothercare cots include advice to "check regularly that all bolts and fastenings are tight". As an added precaution since Alex's death last November, Mothercare said it had added a "very visible" warning to the the mattress base of all new cots which reads: "Warning — failure to tighten could cause the sides, ends or base to collapse. Your child may be injured by falling components or become trapped beneath them."

Alexandra Harvey was found by her mother, with the side of the cot lying on her neck

Phone bill revealed suicide wife was having an affair

BY A CORRESPONDENT

A COMPANY director grieving for his wife, who had committed suicide, learnt from her mobile telephone bill that she had been having an affair. Ken Montgomery, 40, told an inquest yesterday that he had had no idea his wife, Caroline, was being unfaithful.

The inquest was told that police called in to investigate her death found a mystery number on her telephone bill. They traced it to a businessman who, after being told that Mrs Montgomery, 41, had killed herself, admitted having an affair with her. He had seen her during business trips in London.

The inquest in Cardiff was told that Mr and Mrs Montgomery had been married for ten years and had a five-year-old son, Kenneth. They moved back to Britain from Dubai last year and bought a £400,000 house at Penarth, near Cardiff.

They had been due to spend a weekend sailing together in Portsmouth, but Mrs Montgomery had stayed at home after an argument about money. Two days later, when Mr Montgomery returned, he had found his wife dead in a fume-filled car in the garage. She had drunk half a bottle of whisky.

Mr Montgomery said: "I just couldn't understand why she had done it. We had a new £400,000 home and the night before I went to Portsmouth we had had a lovely night out with friends. I couldn't believe she had killed herself just because of the heated discussion we had had."

It was only later, after he received the mobile telephone bill, that he began to suspect there was another motive for his wife's death. "It was a real kick in the guts when I found out about the affair. It was like my wife was leading a double life away from myself and our son. It has been traumatic and has deeply affected my son and myself. Now all I want to do is close the chapter and get on with the job of bringing up Kenneth."

Lawrence Addicot, the Cardiff Coroner, recorded a verdict of suicide. After the hearing Detective Constable Mike Pitt, who investigated Mrs

Montgomery's death, said that the same number kept cropping up on the mobile telephone bill. "When I spoke to this chap it turned out that he had met Mrs Montgomery a couple of months previously and struck up a relationship with her."

"She took to phoning him constantly and they met a couple of times in London. He was obviously very fond of her and was horrified about what had happened to her."

NEWS IN BRIEF

Snowdon railway set for OK

Environmental groups are close to losing their fight to stop the rebuilding of the former Welsh Highland Railway through Snowdonia National Park. John Prescott, the Environment and Transport Secretary, said that he was minded to approve the 21-mile route, against the recommendation of a public inquiry inspector. He is asking the Ffestiniog Railway Company for a detailed survey of rock faces near the Aberglaslyn tunnels to ensure that work does not cause rock falls. The route would run from Dinas, south of Caernarfon, through the national park to Porthmadog.

Cider with Dan

The pub featured by Laurie Lee in his book Cider with Rosie has been sold to a friend of the late author. Lee was a regular at the 300-year-old Woolpack Inn at Stod, Gloucestershire, which has been bought by Dan Chadwick.

Black stroke risk

Black people in Britain are twice as likely to have a stroke than white people, with Caribbean immigrants having the highest death rate. The reason is likely to be genetic or lifestyle, according to a report in the British Medical Journal.

Water firm fined

South West Water has been fined £5,000 with £5,529 costs after admitting supplying water unfit for human consumption. Cullompton magistrates were told that discoloured water was supplied to villages in mid Devon in October 1997.

The crying game

Courses for town criers have opened at a school in Crystal Palace, South London. The organisers expect a surge in demand for town criers because of the millennium celebrations. The students include a former sergeant major.

Fresh spy claims hit Zhu's US visit

FROM BEN MACINTYRE IN WASHINGTON

FRESH allegations that China stole top-secret nuclear weapons research from the United States in order to improve Beijing's neutron bomb placed a new strain on an already tense visit to the US by Zhu Rongji, the Chinese Prime Minister.

The new spying scandal, the second in as many months, came as China and the US struggled to clinch a trade deal that would pave the way for Beijing's entry into the World Trade Organisation.

In 1996 US intelligence sources reported information from a trusted Chinese agent who said that the Chinese intelligence service was boasting that vital US weapons data had been obtained and applied to China's neutron bomb programme. The spy said the secret research had been leaked in 1995.

The White House has hitherto maintained that there is no evidence of Chinese nuclear espionage during the Clinton presidency, but The New York Times reported that Sandy Berger, now the US National Security Adviser, was told of the possible new theft of material relating to neutron bomb production in April 1996.

The new scandal could not come at a more embarrassing time for Mr Zhu and President Clinton as they attempt to paper over issues as America's bulging trade deficit with China, human rights violations and allegations of illicit Chinese funding for the 1996 Clinton presidential campaign. The two leaders were due to attend an informal dinner together last night.

In a welcome speech to the Chinese leader yesterday, Mr Clinton pointedly referred to the "differences" between the United States and China. In response, Mr Zhu said he saw no area of disagreement that could not be settled through "friendly consultations".

The fresh spying charges emerged as Chinese and US officials attempted to broker a deal that would prepare the way for China's admission to the WTO, which has been Beijing's goal for the past 13 years. US officials said yesterday that a full agreement now seemed "unlikely".

The neutron bomb, developed by the US in the 1970s, uses enhanced radiation to kill people while leaving buildings unaffected. China is believed to have built a neutron bomb in the 1980s, using research stolen from the US, but found it defective during tests. The new allegations suggest that the information stolen in 1995 had allowed China to iron out problems in their bomb design.

DISSIDENT ARREST

Beijing: With an occasion intended to do the wrong thing at the wrong time, Chinese police detained a dissident for "endangering state security" just as Zhu Rongji, the Prime Minister, was arriving in the US (James Pringle writes).

The Information Centre of Human Rights in Hong Kong said that Fu Sheu, a human rights activist based in Shaanxi province, had intended to pay respects at the grave of Ho Yaobang, a moderate communist, in advance of the tenth anniversary of Hu's death on April 15.

Solitary Guitarist, by Vasil Perov, one of the works stolen from the Russian State Museum in St Petersburg this week in what police believe is part of a campaign of art theft to order from major Russian collections

Thieves plunder Russian museums to order

FROM ANNA BLUNDY IN MOSCOW

THE theft of two paintings from the Russian Museum in St Petersburg this week is part of a new trend of stealing to order, experts believe. Solitary Guitarist and a sketch for the painting Troika, both by Vasil Perov, a 19th century artist, were taken in a dawn raid on Tuesday.

"There has been a surge of interest in art and antiques among the new rich in the past decade," said Aleksandr Shevchuk, deputy head of the cultural and historical crimes department of the Moscow police. "Thefts to order are always extremely difficult to uncover because so many people are involved."

Art theft in St Petersburg alone has skyrocketed in the past few years, from 18 crimes in 1992 to 178 in 1997. In 1994 four men broke into the St Petersburg Library and took $300 million (£188 million) worth of manuscripts including medieval European, ancient Chinese, Moogolian, Tibetan and Hebrew scripts.

Twelve people were arrested in connection with the crime which was believed to have been ordered by an Israeli collector, though he was never identified.

Vladimir Gusev, the director of the Russian Museum, believes the paintings stolen this week were ordered by a private collector, but says the works are so well known it will not be possible to display them. "The best thing he can do is to bring the things back anonymously," he said.

Russia's museums and galleries lack the funds for adequate anti-theft systems. Only the Hermitage, housed in the winter palace of the tsars in St Petersburg, has invested in Western-style security.

'Human fly' sues TV show over trap

New York: A Norwegian daredevil known as the "Human Fly" is suing a television programme for $2.25 million (£1.4 million) for betraying him to police after he parachuted off the World Trade Centre. Thor Alex Kappfjell was arrested last month after completing an unprecedented hat-trick of city skyscrapers. Earlier jumps were from the Empire State and Chrysler buildings.

Mr Kappfjell, 32, alleges that the syndicated television show Extra, which had bought videotape of his stunts, delayed payment and told police where he was so it could film his arrest. "Police marched in, and Extra was there shooting it," Mr Kappfjell said.

When he asked the producer to put up bail, he was allegedly told: "I do not pay criminals." Mr Kappfjell walked free six days later, having agreed to do a week's community service.

'Bronx rapist' confesses after police kill suspect

FROM JAMES BONE IN NEW YORK

POLICE have arrested the suspected "Bronx rapist" whose attacks on as many as 51 women transformed the political landscape in New York.

Isaac Jones, 38, a night office cleaner, reportedly confessed after he was arrested outside a pawn shop where his girlfriend had tried to get cash for jewellery taken from one of the rapist's victims.

In February, during the massive manhunt for the serial rapist, four Street Crimes Unit officers killed Amadou Diallo, an unarmed West African immigrant, in a hall of gunfire, provoking daily demonstrations and throwing into doubt the political future of Rudolph Giuliani, the city's Mayor.

Mr Jones has been charged with four rapes, but is believed to have assaulted as many as 51 women in 39 separate incidents over the past six years.

Police made the arrest after a woman walked into a pawn shop in the South Bronx with jewellery stolen from two victims of a double rape on Valentine's Day. Because she gave a false name, police stationed a female undercover agent in the shop to await her return. When she came back, two months later, a waiting squad swooped on Mr Jones as he sat outside in a car. He was identified from the same police sketch that bore a superficial resemblance to Mr Diallo, shot dead about a mile from Mr Jones's home.

Police questioned Mr Jones for hours before he confessed, telling detectives that he started raping women because he was himself raped by a stranger when aged seven.

Co-workers described him as charming and were shocked to learn that many of the rapes took place between 4am and 5am, after he had finished a night shift polishing floors in Manhattan skyscrapers.

"He was always smiling, laughing and giggling," said Stephanie Wright, 48, a night-shift secretary at a law firm where he worked. "He was sweet. He made me laugh."

Howard Safir, the police commissioner, said Mr Jones had raped one mother in front of her child. "This is one of the highest numbers of serial rapes," he said.

More than 1,000 demonstrators, including Hollywood stars and Washington politicians, have been arrested during protests against the shooting of Mr Diallo. The furor has put in doubt a possible New York bid by Mr Giuliani for a US Senate seat against Hillary Clinton next year.

Furore not my fault, says dancer

VIVIANA DURANTE, the ballerina who apparently stormed out of rehearsals with the Royal Ballet and refused to dance with her partner, Bruce Sansom, yesterday attempted to salvage her career with the company.

Denying that she was to blame for rift, Durante insisted that she had not screamed but cried when she fell during a complex duet, and that it was Sansom who had refused to continue to dance with her. The ballerina's version of events contradicted reports that she had exploded with rage during rehearsals for Manon and pulled out of the company's Japanese tour. She is said to have insulted Sansom, dismissing him as unfit to partner her even though they have danced together many times. Insiders say that he is placid and gentlemanly.

The Royal Ballet, whose school Durante joined at the age of 10, had issued an unusually strong statement claiming that she had "withdrawn from the Japanese tour because of irreconcilable differences". The company used the same form of words in 1995 when Sir Anthony Dowell, the Royal Ballet director, sacked the Hungarian-born Zoltan Solymosi, who had been brought in to partner Doreen Bussell.

Although there was widespread disbelief at the latest news, several people described Durante — an Italian-born performer adored by her audiences as one of the world's leading dancers — as a hothead whose passion on stage has tended to spill over into real life. Adding to the physical and mental pressures of being a world-class ballerina is the fact that her years at the top are now running out: she is 31. It did not go unnoticed yesterday that she was due to perform Anastasia, a ballet about a neurotic woman, in New York with the American Ballet Theatre in May. Manon, which she was to have performed with the Royal Ballet in Japan, is the story of a woman whose impetu-ous character brings about her downfall.

"It was Bruce who said he would not dance with me, not the other way around," Durante told the London Evening Standard yesterday. "I would have been happy to go on the tour." She did, however, admit she had become upset after Sansom had let her fall heavily but that she had cried rather than shouted.

She added: "I didn't pull out of the tour. After the row I had with Bruce, I had agreed to dance with him again but obviously Sir Anthony wasn't happy and took my Manon shows away from me."

It is not the first time that her discontent with the company has emerged: there have been reports over the years that she was critical of its running and wished to advance her career elsewhere.

Victoria Todd, former director of the Council for Dance Education and Training and current director of the National Campaign for the Arts, expressed sadness at the news. "Nerves are raw," she said, referring to recent months in which the Royal Ballet was facing strike action and an uncertain future. "It was only a matter of time before something like this happened." She added that Durante's departure would be "a great loss" to the company. "Everything must be done to keep her."

Christopher Bannerman, the chairman of Dance UK, the organisation representing the dance profession, said: "It is very sad when these things happen."

Concern was voiced yesterday about the possible effect on Durante's career. Relatively little has been heard of Solymosi since he parted company with the Royal Ballet. It was reported at the time that he had fallen out with Sir Anthony after criticising the choreography. As with Durante, the Hungarian's "volatile" dancing style was said to be matched by his off-stage persona.

Disney bows to Catholic pressure

FROM GILES WHITTILL
IN LOS ANGELES

A FILM starring Matt Damon and Ben Affleck as subversive angels trying to sneak back into Heaven has been rejected by the Walt Disney studio as potentially offensive to Catholics.

Dogma features a descendant of Jesus who works in an abortion clinic, and Alanis Morissette, the pop singer, in the role of God. The script, which also depicts Joseph and Mary having sex, was condemned yesterday by the Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights as bigoted and disturbing.

The film was shown recently to Disney executives who deemed it "inappropriate" for the company as it seeks to re-establish its "family friendly" status after years of attacks from religious groups.

The decision is a blow to Miramax, the Disney subsidiary that triumphed on Oscar night with Shakespeare in Love and Life is Beautiful. Having championed Dogma as a well-meaning satire on religion, the New York-based company is now expected to pay up to $11 million to buy the film outright, even though it reportedly cost only $5 million to make. "We intend to work with a distributor that shares our vision of the film ... as broad entertainment," Harvey Weinstein, the Miramax chairman, told The New York Times.

Disney has in recent years fallen foul of both Catholic and Baptist groups, often because of cutting-edge Miramax releases, among them Priest, the British film about a gay Catholic pastor that was released in the US in 1994 to a chorus of pickets and protests. Disney is also accused of operating "gay-friendly" employment policies.

The power of posh paint

Is there any point paying pots of money for designer paint?
Grace Bradberry reports

If you have a talent for extravagance, you will know how versatile this particular gift can be. Whereas dexterity at the harp does not necessarily translate into nimble fingers at the Nintendo, extravagance can leap from one retail category to another with the ease and speed of nits in a nursery class.

Six months ago, when I moved into my first flat, I knew nothing of the existence of designer paint. I could recite the name of every major store in New Bond Street but I had never heard of Paint Library. In this pre-diluvian state I bought a five-litre tub of B&Q white matt emulsion and saw no reason why I should not splash it across the length and breadth of my flat. First, however, it was necessary to strip the floral 1970s wallpaper coated in baby-blue emulsion, and by the time this was complete I had seen the light.

Today I would no sooner do a B&Q whitewash than fill my freezer with economy burgers, drink Asti Spumante or laugh at Jim Davidson's jokes.

White paint, indeed any paint, now presents itself as an ethical dilemma. They could feature it on The Moral Maze and it would not seem out of place. Can it ever, in any circumstances, be right to spend £24 on a 2.5-litre tub of paint when you can buy the same amount of Dulux for £12.99?

You can reason that designer paint is very new Labour — No 10 has reportedly been redecorated in Paint Library (£24 for 2.5 litres of matt emulsion); you can tell yourself that Kylie Minogue has Sophie Rose on her walls (Paint Library again). Yet when the price rises above Farrow & Ball's £17.99 for 2.5 litres, and the company address says Chelsea, the conscience gives a twang.

Oddly, I felt no such mental turmoil choosing a sofa from The Conran Shop rather than Ikea. But then the thing about paint is that it is meant to be cheap. Read any interior-design book and it will reassure you that "paint is an inexpensive way to transform a room", and though the moment I read this I knew it couldn't be strictly true — nothing is cheap if you really put your mind to it — the mantra has lodged in my brain.

Whenever I flip through a John Oliver swatch book (£23.21 for a 2.5-litre tin), I feel as if I am wrestling with the Devil. I want to side with the angels and buy Crown Expressions but my dreams are now coloured in Hornblende, Hunter Dunn and Chalcedony — all from Paint Library.

I'm not convinced that designer paint is really any different from any other kind, and I have still less confidence in my ability to deploy it to best effect. When I enter the more fashionable paint boutiques I feel like a 15-stone woman wandering into Gucci.

Rula Theocharis, a freelance colour consultant, insists that the more expensive paints are generally better. "For example, red is one of the most difficult colours to reproduce and with, say, John Oliver, you have a purer colour."

On the other hand, I've read an interview with a designer who said that he always used Dulux, and that success could be achieved with any mass-market range provided one had colour sense. But colour sense is exactly what interior designers are selling, so offering to use cheap paint may well be the equivalent of personal shoppers who charge £500, then take you to Miss Selfridge. No doubt even this chap has lapses of ascetic intent and splashes John Oliver's Imari Red across his walls in the dead of night.

In truth, though, the red argument is a red herring where I'm concerned. I will not be putting Salem Red on my walls (Lawrence T. Bridgeman's Old Village Paint range, £14.95 a quart), nor Fired Earth's Better Class Red.

Using varying shades of off-white in panels, squares, stripes and blocks remains, as far as I'm concerned, the dernier cri of chic. It also negates the need to match tones and "play" with clashing colours. But there is a whole world of nuance, a thousand social dangers, in the colour white.

In the absence of any innate feeling for colour, I am avoiding Laura Ashley's Country White simply because of the name, redolent as it is of idyllic cottage interiors tucked away in edge-of-town housing estates. I have also given in when it comes to Farrow & Ball's Off-White, Old White, Wall White and Lime White, which all look fawn to me.

Instead, after six months of agonising, a long and distressing illness phase, and the acquisition of approximately 20 different colour charts (Zoffany, Sanderson, Cole & Son, Marston & Langinger, Annie Sloan, Auro, Dulux Trade, Macpherson), I am now fixated on the 24 shades of Off White produced by Papers & Paints. No other paint company will now do. Distressingly, it is also the most expensive range I have so far discovered.

A little cut now goes a long way...

Europe, says Anatole Kaletsky

Yesterday was a crucial day in the economic histories of Britain and Europe. The announcement of a half-point rate cut by the European Central Bank was the Frankfurt bank's first monetary action since it took control of economic policy in the 11 countries of euroland.

By acting more boldly than expected, the bank tried to shake off the image of complacency from which it has suffered since its failure to respond to the worldwide financial crisis and the economic downturn in Germany last autumn. But whether yesterday's move lays the foundations for a healthy economic recovery in Europe will depend largely on whether Wim Duisenberg, the bank's President, admits to a new monetary philosophy in the weeks ahead.

In Britain, too, there is more uncertainty than usual about the consequences of yesterday's rate cut. The Bank of England may have taken a risk by cutting interest rates for the sixth time in seven months, on this occasion by a quarter point. The British rate cut was announced against a background of buoyant car sales, accelerating house prices and record levels of remortgage borrowing, as householders lock into borrowing rates at the under-5 per cent of just 5 per cent or so over ten years.

A quarter point cut is quite a lot when rates are so low

I welcome the Bank's decision to add more monetary fuel to an economy that may already be set for take-off. In my view, sticking rigidly to an arbitrary inflation target is less vital than trying to reduce unemployment further by boosting economic growth. But in terms of the Bank's strict anti-inflationary mandate, yesterday's decision may well seem mistaken if it becomes the catalyst for a new boom in housing, consumer spending and financial services. That, in turn, could prompt a panic reaction from the Bank and the markets, generating expectations that British interest rates will soon rise and push up the pound.

These predictions are, of course, just personal intuitions. Plenty of economists take the opposite line, issuing warnings that industry is still stuck in recession and that interest rates must be cut to the continental level before British companies can have a fair chance to compete. Rather than argue with my fellow economic seers about our respective readings of the statistical entrails, I want to devote the rest of this space to a broader question which, to judge by my postbag, seems very perplexing to non-economists, including politicians and businessmen.

Why do I get so excited about apparently tiny shifts in monetary policy, like the ones announced yesterday? The simple answer is that a "mere" quarter or half-point is proportionally quite a lot when interest rates are as low as they are today. Yesterday's European rate cut reduced the cost of servicing a euro loan by almost a fifth and, in theory, raised the value of European assets, such as shares and property, by almost as much.

Will they never learn?

Nato's leaders are treading the path that led to insanity in Vietnam

Another middle way has not worked. The Great Bombing Pretext is collapsing in Kosovo, as it was bound to collapse. Foreign policy is revealed not as focus-grouped, glamorous kid-machismo but as something that kills people. Nato's bombing adventure in Kosovo looked good for a day or two. But it was always cynical and ill thought-out. Now, with generals on both sides of the Atlantic screaming no, the "immaculate coercion" of the cruise missile war must be followed by the real thing.

In the United States this week I have heard almost no support for Nato's belief that "bombing alone" would win security for Kosovo's Albanians. I hear only Lyndon Johnson's notorious Vietnam quote, "I never felt that this war would be won from the air". Yesterday's New York Times/CBS poll was clear. Will airstrikes stop President Milosevic? Sixty per cent say no. Will America send ground troops? Seventy-five per cent say yes. The 24 American ground attack helicopters being sent to Albania are the first swallows of an awesome summer. Last October Western diplomats told Mr Milosevic to give autonomy to Kosovo "or else". He was threatening no state, and perpetrating no greater evil than those being ignored by the West in the Caucasus or condoned as a fait accompli in Bosnia. But great men had said "or else", and the networks were watching. So now it is "or else".

Europe thinks it goes to war when diplomacy has failed. America thinks it goes to war when Europe has failed. It is grimly intriguing that the American pro-war lobby is made up of mostly younger people who do not remember (or have forgotten) the Vietnam escalation. The issue, once again, is not the plausibility of the operation but the esteem of Uncle Sam and confidence in America's military omnipotence. As for whether a Kosovan war will be anything but an American one, you can hear, read and talk about this subject from dawn to dusk and not hear a word about British involvement — beyond the complaint that "America is having to rescue Europe from another of its messes".

The collapse of "bombing alone" this past fortnight has been spectacular. The misreading of Mr Milosevic by Nato deserves to rank with the Gallipoli and Pearl Harbor in the annals of military incompetence.

Bill Clinton and Tony Blair could not have been more clear in the objective. It was to "stop the killing and ethnic cleansing in Kosovo and force Milosevic to grant the region partial autonomy". The bombing has achieved the opposite. By targeting cities, factories and bridges, and hitting enough houses to kill civilians (including, of all obscenities, native Kosovans in Pristina), the bombs have increased support for the regime and made compromise less likely.

Why leaders pursue strategies that so regularly fail (as this approach failed in Iraq) is for psychologists to answer. Mr Milosevic's response was exactly as predicted. Faced with demands that he accept Nato troops on his soil and a promise that they would not be imposed, he had to judge whether that promise was believable. He sensibly concluded that it was not. He urgently moved his formidable army into Kosovo, where until this week not a single bomber had been able to find it. In two weeks the Yugoslav leader cleared half the province of its Albanian population and, in grim Balkan fashion, treated perhaps hundreds of Albanian men as putative KLA fighters and shot them dead. Mr Milosevic is now in a position to offer a "monitored ceasefire" but with the Kosovo Liberation Army truly crushed. It defies belief that anyone in London or Washington thought bombing alone would achieve any other outcome.

Nato spin-doctors are frantically trying to express "surprise" that Mr Milosevic moved so fast and acted so ruthlessly, and argue that bombing alone was always a long-term strategy, whatever that means. The American press hoots derision at such excuses. The Pentagon and the Ministry of Defence are known to have been sceptics about bombing from the start. In the nearest Washington comes to an official statement, "sources" this week admitted that there never was any coherence to bombing alone. As a State Department official admitted: "We have accomplished nothing." The policy is dead.

Whether Mr Milosevic would have behaved with the ruthlessness of the past two weeks without the bombing is, of course, horribly moot. What is certain is that before the arrival of Madeleine Albright, Robin Cook, Richard Holbrooke and the world's most powerful bombs, Mr Milosevic was conducting a guerrilla war with the equally

THE LONG CAMPAIGN

Labour's lead in Scotland may not be as secure as it seems

It is, Alex Salmond said yesterday, "the most important election in Scotland's history". On that, at least, Tony Blair would appear to be in agreement. The Prime Minister used his first formal outing on the hustings to attack Mr Salmond and the SNP in vivid language. The voters of Scotland, by contrast, are not expressing quite the same level of enthusiasm for this contest. The campaign has been running continuously since the referendum result that endorsed a parliament with modest tax-raising powers over 18 months ago. It has existed in shadow form since devolution re-emerged as a central issue in Scottish life in the 1960s. Kosovo is, for the moment, overshadowing this battle.

The parties have done their best this week to rekindle passions. Policies have been showered on the Scots from all directions. Labour has put forward five "key pledges", the Conservatives seven, the SNP ten or 14 depending on the precise method of calculation, and the Liberal Democrats more than 20. The issues, although extremely worthy, have a certain familiarity. All four parties favour enhanced spending on the Scottish Health Service, several computers stuffed into every Scottish classroom, and dramatic new measures to deal with Scotland's drug crisis. All the opposition parties seem inclined to repeal higher education fees and abolish tolls on the bridge that links the Isle of Skye with the Scottish mainland.

The contest would be more dramatic if independence itself were the central question. Labour, not the SNP, has done its best to make the Union the defining issue. A remorseless assault on the economic costs of separation has allowed Labour to reassert its authority. Mr Salmond has been obliged to shift SNP strategy. His most prominent promise now is that the SNP would forgo next year's income tax cut and use that money for social expenditure.

This pledge is a transparent bid for the ballots of "old Labour" sympathisers, particularly those located in the West of Scotland. The SNP needs to expand its support beyond its traditional heartland in northeastern Scotland into Strathclyde if it is ever to acquire a parliamentary majority. There are, though, real risks for Mr Salmond in endorsing tax increases. This stand may be popular in Glasgow but may not play well in the northeast, which was relatively cool about tax-raising powers during the referendum campaign and are enjoying an economic renaissance.

There is little reason, though, for Labour to be complacent. The SNP is unlikely to convert urban Scotland en masse but Donald Dewar may have difficulties in persuading his natural supporters to visit the polling station. A low turnout would hurt Labour. The new voting arrangements will confuse some voters and may lead others to divide their loyalties between Labour in the constituency section and the SNP in the party list element. Mr Dewar may regret the day that he endorsed proportional representation.

This election may yet come to turn on personalities and the broader theme of Scottish identity. If so, it will move into Mr Salmond's strongest territory. The SNP leader is without doubt the most charismatic of the contenders for First Minister and will exploit patriotic sentiment. Mr Dewar cannot be expected to provide him with competition. Mr Blair is not widely loved in Scotland and there is a limit to the degree that Mr Brown can be presented as a surrogate Prime Minister. Given the likelihood of Scottish Liberal Democrats eventually gravitating to Labour after the election, the odds are still strongly in favour of Labour running the first Scottish executive. The struggle to be the largest single party in the parliament is, however, by no means settled.

NO TIME TO TRADE BLAME

Refugees risk becoming the fuse of a wider conflagration

Refugees do not willingly leave their last possessions lying in the mud, throw away identity papers and abandon scarce food half-eaten. The Macedonians' pell-mell evacuation of Blace, the wretched holding-point on the Kosovo-Macedonia border, has inflicted further misery on families who had already endured the unspeakable. It is hard to understand how this mass trans-shipment could have taken international monitors so totally by surprise that they still have not established where thousands of these people have been sent.

The huge fleet of buses that moved them cannot have been assembled without anybody noticing; and there were reasons to be alert. This was not the first instance — the snail-like conduct of border officials and the bundling of refugees on to planes to Turkey were others — of the Kosovan deportees being treated by Macedonian police and military more like cattle than like human beings in extremis.

But while every effort must be made to see that all Kosovo's fugitives are now registered and protected as well as fed and sheltered, to let recriminations inflame an already taut situation would be short-sighted and dangerous. Trading blame will not help the Kosovans; and for Nato, good working relations with the Macedonian Government are indispensable. However rough the Macedonian handling of Blace, that foetid encampment did urgently need emptying before it was swept by epidemics; and the authorities had been severely criticised for failing to act earlier.

It is anything but true, as the Macedonian Government asserts, that the country has had no Western help in handling the humanitarian crisis: Nato has set up huge tent cities, and ferried in 1,400 tons of supplies. But it is equally unfair not to recognise that Macedonia's conduct is partly ascribable to panic. A much larger and richer country would be overwhelmed by the arrival on its borders, within days, of 130,000 destitute people. That is equivalent to 5.9 per cent of Macedonia's 2.2 million population. The same ratio, for Britain, would be 3.4 million refugees. In Macedonia, a melting-pot whose Slavic majority rubs shoulders with half a million Albanians, as well as ethnic Turks, Bulgarians and Romanians, the fear is that they will stay, destroying the tenuous accommodation which has brought Albanian parties into the governing coalition.

Not for nothing is Macedonia called "the powder-keg of the Balkans". Many in the Skopje elite, which has uncomfortably close links with Belgrade and is deeply suspicious of Albanian nationalist aspirations, have scant sympathy for the refugees. The best way to cope with this distasteful situation is to acknowledge that its Government is walking a tightrope. The West must demonstrate convincingly that it will receive both ample humanitarian aid and broader economic support to weather the disruptions of war — and above all to persuade it that its best prospect of seeing the refugees return to Kosovo is intensified co-operation with Nato. Mishandled, this crisis could prompt Skopje to throw in its lot with Belgrade, a course that would be disastrous for Macedonia, but also for the conduct of the war: Nato will need to use the Macedonian land routes into Kosovo.

Equally urgent is generous help for Montenegro, whose brave democratic Government is handling 60,000 refugees while being actively destabilised by Belgrade; and in miserably poor Albania, where one in ten is now a refugee — almost all of them Ghegs, in a land riven by clan rivalry between Ghegs and Tosks. Slobodan Milosevic's purposes will be well served if, by straining economies and ethnic tolerance, he can set off a chain of uncontrollable regional confrontations. He must at all costs be outflanked.

ASIAN ENTERPRISE

Energy and talent have turned refugees into millionaires

As newcomers to Britain, they huddled in wintry airports and temporary reception centres, penniless, shivering and shocked. But the 50,000 Asians expelled in 1972 from Uganda by its then President Idi Amin have turned that tale of woe into a dramatic success story. A list of the 200 richest Asians in Britain, published this week, shows that the bedraggled East African refugees of a quarter of a century ago are now, with the Chinese community, Britain's most high-flying ethnic minority.

The courage, talent and sheer hard work with which Ugandan and other Asian immigrants rebuilt their lives, in a country whose welcome was tempered with anxiety, have proved a blessing not only for the new millionaires themselves but for the British economy as a whole. Tens of thousands of jobs have been created by expanding Asian businesses, and more will follow. Asian enterprise, still concentrated in the traditional food, fashion and retailing sectors, is now moving into high-tech and hotel industries and the media. Increasing numbers of businesswomen are taking their place beside businessmen. The young are taking their place beside, or instead of, their parents; for first-generation entrepreneurs foster an early knowledge of management in their children by training them in the businesses they found — then handing them on. The merit of Asian business strategies speaks for itself: the combined wealth of the list's entrepreneurs is more than £7 billion.

The energy that made millionaires of a few is fuelling a broader move towards integration and minority achievement in modern Britain. Non-white teenagers are now more likely than their white counterparts to stay at school after 16; the percentage of black and Asian Britons with degrees is higher than that of whites.

Such achievements are all the more remarkable in light of the racism still to be found in parts of British society, which continues to throw up obstacles for minorities. Black and Asian Britons are under-represented in the police, Whitehall and the upper echelons of the public sector. In a country now painfully trying, in the wake of the Stephen Lawrence inquiry, to eradicate racial injustice, the economic success of Britain's irrepressible Asian millionaires serves not only as a mute reproach to the insular who once feared their immigration. It also offers fresh evidence of the benefits of working together to create a genuinely multicultural society.

Attitudes harden on both sides of Kosovo conflict

From Professor Timothy Williamson, FBA

Sir, Nato action has created solidarity between anti-authoritarian Serb intellectuals and the Milosevic Government. I have longstanding contacts with teachers of philosophy at Belgrade University, opponents of Milosevic until recently, in some cases at risk of their jobs, who now firmly support his refusal to give in to Nato demands.

They have no illusions about the military disparity and are prepared to endure bombing over the long haul. They know of Serb ethnic cleansing, but believe that withdrawal of all Yugoslav forces from Kosovo would lead to ethnic cleansing in the reverse direction, of ordinary Serbs by the KLA, a fear amply grounded in the army's past record (Humanitarian Law Violations in Kosovo, Human Rights Watch, New York, 1998). They have no confidence that a Nato peace-keeping force would prevent such results.

Escalating Nato violence hardens Serb resolve and undermines the prospects for moderate political forces in Belgrade, on whose development hopes for stability in the region depend. Is Nato making any serious attempt to provide a way for Serbia to back down without engaging in what educated Serbs would perceive as a betrayal of fellow-Serbs in Kosovo?

Nato leaders' well-meaning but counter-productive toughness is no substitute for a realistic long-term strategy.

Yours faithfully,
TIMOTHY WILLIAMSON

April 7.

From Mrs Catherine Windels

Sir, Michael Binyon (report, April 3) writes about the strong public support in Europe for sending ground troops to Kosovo and the high level of concern over this course in the US.

I am sure most American readers of your paper have had their fill of articles pointing to American ignorance of the issues in Kosovo. In fact, Americans are fully aware of two key facts. First, the civil war in which we have so disastrously intervened is manifestly a local European conflict, of the sort our ancestors came to America to avoid; one in which Americans have become enmeshed for reasons none of our leaders (or yours) can explain convincingly.

Second, the vast majority of the ground troops Nato would supply would be American soldiers, such as the three young men paraded on Serb television.

Ignorant though some of us may be of the murky details of Balkan history, Americans have more than enough information to justify opposition to intensifying American involvement in this.

From Mr K. R. H. Allen

Sir, It should be a matter of principle that if reporters based in Yugoslavia are not allowed to visit sites of supposed atrocities in Kosovo, they should remain silent when taken to places where Nato's bombing campaign has, very regrettably, resulted in the death or wounding of civilians. Instead, we see on television Serbs taunting Nato with cowardice for unwillingness to fight them on the ground. This is nauseating when some Serbs believe it is legitimate to despoil, rape and murder defenceless Kosovo civilians.

I believe Nato servicemen deserve better understanding from the media.

Yours faithfully,
RODNEY ALLEN,

From the Ambassador of Poland

Sir, I was surprised by your report (April 3) alleging that Poland feels reassured because Nato is showing its defiance of Moscow by conducting air raids in the former Yugoslavia, and that we support this operation not least because of the opposition to it from the Russian Federation.

First, let me stress that Poland's will to accede to the Alliance had nothing to do with a threat from any specific country — there were plenty of well known reasons upon which, I think, it is not necessary to dwell here again.

Second, it seems to be obvious that the reason for the operation in the former Yugoslavia is Nato's will to stop a humanitarian disaster in Kosovo. Nato's current armed operations offer the best avenue of coercing

President Milosevic into returning to the path of negotiations and respect for human rights. Poland very much counts on the Russian co-operation in this respect.

Sincerely yours,
R. STEMPLOWSKI,

From Sir Henry McDowell

Sir, Are we fighting a previous war? We seem to be assuming that Milosevic, following precedent, might ultimately seek to maintain his policies against international opposition by turning to the use of his guns, tanks and warplanes. His military power must therefore be reduced as our first priority.

But he has devised a cruel alternative to armed warfare, which has so far made the use of his military strength quite unnecessary. To secure his policies and position, he has loaded countries opposing those policies with an almost intractable burden of caring for refugees.

What should be the defensive strategy to "warfare" waged in this way?

Yours sincerely,
HENRY McDOWELL,

From Mr John Pedler

Sir, The best way to demonstrate that the Kosovars shall return to their country is for the European countries of Nato to pledge contributions to a fund ample to restore every home destroyed by the Serbs. That not only would give concrete hope to the Kosovar refugees, and credible reassurance to their hosts that their stay will be limited — but would infect the Serbs with a sense of futility.

The West should not show in Kosovo the same disregard for the politico-military potential of aid that those of us involved found in Bosnia. Most Serbs in Serbia, as in Bosnia, want a share in European prosperity and an end to their hated pariah status. Were the Europeans to offer that alternative, which cannot come without a change of leadership, they would be shooting at Milosevic's Achilles' heel. Where the stick is short, a carrot is needed.

der may have been anything other than a purely racially motivated crime was, apparently, evidence of unwitting racism.

There appears to be no acknowledgement in the interview of the incompetence that led to the publication of informants' names and addresses in Sir William's report, yet he has castigated officers for their mistakes. But then neither he nor his panel is subject to complaint, investigation and, perhaps, punishment under a disciplinary code.

We hope that the legacy of Stephen Lawrence is a better, more tolerant and responsible society. The police officers of London are ready, willing and able to meet the challenges. In return they expect fairness and balance.

Business basis for eurosceptic stance

From Mr Colin Bullen

Sir, The assertions by Labour MPs Giles Radice and Bill Rammell (letter, April 7) concerning the business view of EMU are unsustainable. The Institute of Directors have made clear their very grave doubts over the single currency while the Federation of Small Businesses have twice voted at their AGM to withdraw from the EU altogether.

The reality is that only about 15 per cent of business activity has any connection with the EU, the rest being either confined within the UK or relating to the wide world outside Europe. Is it sensible that, in order to satisfy the demands of a few multinational companies, we should sacrifice both our political independence and accountable system of government, by tying ourselves irrevocably to an organisation with which we have had an adverse trade balance for decades and which is afflicted both with institutional corruption and an inefficient economic structure?

Yours faithfully,
C. R. BULLEN
(Member, NEC, Campaign for an Independent Britain), 119 Douglas Road,
Tonbridge, Kent TN9 2UE.

From Mr R. Lathey

Sir, Giles Radice and Bill Rammell declare that "the base of British euroscepticism is rooted in confusion and misinformation".

On the contrary, the basis of British euroscepticism is rooted in the clear knowledge that the country is being led — regardless of the views of the electorate — into a European super-state, and that the single currency is merely the next step in that direction.

The confusion and misinformation rest with those who are unable to accept this or, worse, accept it but seek to camouflage the true agenda.

Museum's Great Court

From Professor Emeritus Luke Herrmann

Sir, In your article and leader on the British Museum Great Court development (April 5; see also letter, same day) you infer criticism of the museum's keepers for putting the storage and display of their collections before the integrity of the great building that houses them.

My Oxford English Reference Dictionary defines a museum as "a building used for storing and exhibiting objects of historical, scientific or cultural interest". In modern times architects and their patrons have often ignored this — Berlin's new Jewish Museum and the proposed V&A extension, for instance — and remarkable feats of architecture have come before practicality.

Keepers at the British Museum must continue to put their collections first. It is good to have "a great new public plaza for London" on the premises as an added attraction to draw in visitors, but they must not be diverted from the galleries, and these must not be overshadowed, as in their present state many will be, by the plaza.

Let us hope that the strengthened management of the British Museum (report, April 1) will immediately find equal resources to help the keepers in their primary task.

Hysteria lecture

From Dr Helen King

Sir, Dr Gardner-Thorpe (letter, April 1) correctly identifies the colour illustration to your feature on female circumcision (Weekend, March 27) as Jean-Martin Charcot's demonstration of hysteria at the Salpêtrière.

But the patient — probably Blanche Wittman, the "Queen of Hysterics" — may have learnt her moves from something omitted from the reproduction you used: a drawing of one of the stages of hysteria, displayed at the back of the lecture room. This was by Paul Richer, who can be seen in your illustration next to Charcot capturing Blanche's swoon.

Like our own chat-show guests, Blanche may have dutifully supplied what her audience wanted to see.

ITV's standards

From Mr John Clark

Sir, Raymond Snoddy, in his summary of the Independent Television Commission's annual review covering ITV, concluded that, adding up its inadequacies and prevarications, ITV is a disgrace (article, "ITV runs out of excuses", Media Times, April 2).

The previous evening the programme Naked Secrets was positioned in the hour between 10pm and 11pm. News at Ten had been replaced by a programme on table dancing.

When ITV dropped News at Ten it put out an advertising campaign telling us that ITV was getting better. This "improvement" is being over-

Voter recognition

From Sir Frederic Bennett

Sir, Over half a century ago my wife and I happened to be in South Sudan when the first free universal franchise elections were to be held. Illiteracy was all-prevailing, so neither the names of the parties nor the candidates could usefully appear on the ballot paper. Hence, all those entitled to cast their vote had to choose, when putting their mark, between logos of animals which all could recognise.

I recall that the party represented by the crocodile got fewer votes than any other: surely to be expected because the banks of the River Nile are infested with these reptiles which are man's most feared enemy in the region.

I was intrigued, therefore, to read in your report, "Voting — as easy as falling off a log" (April 3), that we electors in Britain, despite the endless repetition of "education, education, education" being the biggest issue of the day, are soon to be freed of any confusion about for whom or for what we are voting by helpful pictorial logos.

Press on, Mr Blunkett.

Last wishes

From Mr Ron Carver

Sir, I am totally in favour of charitable donations rather than floral tributes to mark a death and have made a similar request in my own will.

However, I strongly resent those who place this request in the Deaths column without the courtesy of adding "if desired" or something similar.

This arrogant presumption overlooks the fact that some may feel the particular deceased is worthy of no tribute, floral or charitable.

Roman window-pane factory tracked down at York

By NORMAN HAMMOND, ARCHAEOLOGY CORRESPONDENT

A RARE Roman glass factory has been identified in York, the ancient Eboracum, and one of the principal cities in the Empire's northernmost province. Although thousands of Roman glass vessels and numerous fragments of window-glass are known, this is the first manufactory whose location can be pinpointed.

Evidence for the factory was excavated 20 years ago, during investigation of the Coppergate site now occupied by the Jorvik Viking Centre, but has only recently been recognised.

More than 180 pottery sherds with melted glass adhering to them were identified as manufacturing debris, because some of the glass was incompletely fused.

This "semi-fused batch material" was found redeposited in Viking levels of the famous "Coppergate Dig" site, and was initially thought to be of Viking date, but detailed scrutiny of the stratigraphic records for the site showed that a small but important amount of both the glass-melting pots and the batch material was securely stratified in Roman layers.

"This strongly suggested that glassmaking took place during the Roman period, and was confirmed when the pots were identified as 'Ebor ware', the local coarse pottery made between about AD 71 and 250," says Caroline Jackson and her colleagues in the Journal of Glass Studies.

The Coppergate area of the Roman city had other light industries as well, including potteries, and clay close to the riverbank, where products could be shipped.

The pots may have been made close by, but they were also chosen because they could withstand temperatures of 1,150 C without losing their shape. "This quality explains why the local domestic pottery could be used to melt glass, and why there was no need for any specialised industrial facilities," the investigators say.

The presence of tridymite and cristobalite, inversions of quartz that form at 867 and 1,250 degrees respectively, show that the raw materials had been heated almost to the latter temperature, but not for long.

"At these temperatures there can be no doubt that the aim was to produce glass, even if, in this case, the effort was not a success," they say.

Glassmaking in antiquity is often claimed to have been a two-stage process, with the raw materials fused around 700-850 degrees to form a "frit", which was then ground to powder and melted above 1,000 degrees to make glass. The York evidence suggests that a single-stage process may have been used instead, something which experiment has shown to be feasible.

The chemical composition of the York glass was slightly different from the Roman imperial standard, with a higher level of potassium that may have been due to the presence of plant ash. It was not contamination from the crucibles, and these were in fact carefully chosen for their buff colour and lack of iron, which if it had melted into the glass would have imparted a distinctive blue-green tint.

The York glass was clear to light green, and may well have been intended for making window-panes rather than containers. The molten glass would have been cast in moulds, leaving no characteristic waste products.

"There would have been a great demand for window glass at the time," the investigators say. "Not only were parts of the fortress being rebuilt, but there was also much building activity in the civilian settlement - this was a rapidly growing town which became the provincial capital of northern Britain."

The main glassmaking centres of the Roman Empire were in Egypt and Judaea, where raw materials were abundant, but too bulky and caustic to ship easily. Alexandrian glass was the more expensive. This limited manufacture of raw glass might account for the uniform chemical composition of vessels, wherever they were blown.

Window-glass was cheaper than blown cups and vases, according to Roman price edicts, which would make shipping less profitable and local manufacture more tempting.

The slightly different composition of the York glass suggests a degree of experimentation, but more studies which discriminate between the two kinds of glass are needed, as are more directed investigations of the industrial process itself. "After all, this is probably the only glass in the Roman Empire whose place of manufacture can be exactly pinpointed," the investigators note.

OBITUARIES

Sir Jamie Flanagan, CBE,
Chief Constable of the RUC, 1973-76, died on April 4 aged 85. He was born on January 15, 1914.

SIR JAMIE FLANAGAN was the first — and as yet only — Roman Catholic to be Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. He was well-liked by both communities, and it was his job to enforce the rule of law at the height of the Troubles. In this time he had to respond to two events which (for different reasons) threatened the efficacy and integrity of the RUC: the Ulster Workers' Council strike of 1974, and the talks between the Provisional IRA and the British Government the following year.

The strike of May 1974 — called by loyalists unhappy with the Sunningdale power-sharing agreement — succeeded in breaking the new executive. Much criticism was directed at the RUC, whose members were seen talking to masked members of the paramilitary Ulster Defence Association at the barricades. Flanagan rebutted accusations that he had failed to confront the strike properly. He denied any collusion between the RUC and loyalist paramilitaries, pointing out that not a single member of his force had mutilated to join the strikers.

Later that year the IRA declared a ceasefire. Flanagan was one of the first to express scepticism publicly, proceeding to increase the number of police road checks in West Belfast. He was wary of the ramifications of dialogue with the IRA, believing that the "incident centres" established by the Government to combat local crime would only consolidate the republicans' grip on Catholic areas, thus undermining the position of the RUC. He also voiced opposition to the reduction in the number of troops in republican areas, and was reported to have been furious when Merlyn Rees, then Northern Ireland Secretary, suggested that certain republican leaders should be issued with firearm certificates.

Flanagan became alarmed at rumours that such moves were part of a plan to replace the RUC. This was denied by Rees, though Flanagan's departure in May 1976 was an unhappy and controversial affair. It was reported that he had wanted to stay on, but Rees sought his removal because Flanagan refused to implement measures which were widely supposed to form parts of a ceasefire deal with the IRA. It was a strange way to go: he had said when he took up the position in 1973 that he would stay for only two years.

James Bernard Flanagan was born in Londonderry, the son of a sergeant in the Royal Irish Constabulary. He joined the RUC in 1933, and by 1942 was a district inspector. After the war, in which he served on attachment to the War Office, he was seconded to the Foreign and Colonial Office, and went to Greece as part of the British police mission to help to restructure the police force there.

In 1952 he returned to the RUC and after some time in Co Londonderry and West Belfast he was promoted to county inspector and transferred to police headquarters in Belfast. He rose through the ranks of chief superintendent and assistant chief constable, and by 1970 he was deputy chief constable.

Flanagan's appointment to Chief Constable was meant to be an encouraging signal to the Catholics in Ulster, and in many ways he was very successful. He managed to initiate formal contacts with the police force of the Irish Republic; he was popular among both Catholics and Protestants — the former regarding him as a man who would give them a fair deal, the latter welcoming his readiness to enforce the law. At the time of his controversial departure, both the SDLP leader Gerry Fitt and the Rev Ian Paisley of the DUP rallied round to support him.

For security reasons Flanagan attended Mass at a different church each week. On one occasion the police had to raid a house adjacent to one of Flanagan's more regular churches, where they discovered notes documenting his churchgoing schedule.

A more serious security threat came in July 1974, when it was discovered — mid-flight — that an aircraft on which he was travelling was carrying a bomb. The British Airways jet, bound for London with 85 passengers, made an emergency landing at Manchester. Following its evacuation a 2lb gelignite bomb was found under a seat. The device had failed to explode because the drawing pin used in the timing device had a layer of paint on it, preventing the current from making a loop through the watch hand.

After his retirement Flanagan and his wife settled eventually in Suffolk, where he did much work for the Police Athletic Association and for the Sue Ryder Foundation.

He was appointed MBE in 1952, advanced to OBE in 1968 and to CBE in 1973. He was knighted in 1975.

He married Florence Acheson in 1938; they had two sons and a daughter.

Flanagan: respected by both communities

RUTH GIPPS

Ruth Gipps, MBE,
composer and conductor,
died on February 23 aged 78.
She was born in Bechill-on-Sea, East Sussex, on February 20, 1921.

AS THE first woman to conduct at the Festival Hall, and as founder of the London Repertoire training orchestra, Ruth Gipps — or "Wid" as she was almost universally known — was an inspiration to generations of budding musicians and composers, men and women alike.

Formed in 1955, the London Repertoire was aimed both at young would-be musicians and at out-of-work orchestral players, with the aim of cultivating a high standard of playing and sight-reading. "Double basses, are you sure that A is meant to be natural?" she would boom out over her all-male orchestra.

Her Chanticleer Orchestra, which she founded in 1961, won her much acclaim and performed many times on the South Bank. With both of her orchestras she regularly promoted the works of 20th-century British composers and gave opportunities to young soloists in need of their first break: among them were the singer Jane Highfield, the cellists Alexander Baillie and Julian Lloyd Webber and the violinist José Luis García.

Born into a musical family — her Swiss mother was a pianist and ran a music school at their home in Bechill — Ruth Dorothy Louise Gipps insisted on being allowed to play the piano as soon as she could reach the keys. At the age of four she made her public debut in London, and at eight she published her first composition The Fairy Shoemaker. At 16 she went to the Royal College of Music, where her teachers included Gordon Jacob, Vaughan Williams and Leon Goossens. In 1942 Sir Henry Wood conducted her Knight in Armour at the Last Night of the Proms. She was for several years first oboe and cor anglais player with the City of Birmingham Symphony Orchestra, as well as being chorus director of the City of Birmingham Choir and conductor of the Co-op Orchestra and Listener's Club Choir. It was while at Birmingham that she realised she would have to abandon her hoped-for career as a piano soloist: an old childhood injury to her shoulder was giving her trouble with her right hand.

On returning to London in 1954 she started working as a guest conductor. Despite the resistance she encountered, Gipps became the first woman to conduct the all-male London Symphony Orchestra (in 1957). She later conducted her own Third Symphony for a BBC broadcast.

Her strength lay in her enthusiasm. Never one to sit around waiting for the masses to come to her, she took classical music to the people, in the form of lunchtime concerts and in evening classes; and when she conducted, it was usually from memory, even with such works as Sir Arthur Bliss's Colour Symphony.

She taught counterpoint and musical history at Trinity College, then the Royal College of Music and, finally, became Co-Principal at Gypsy Hill. She was made chairman of the Composers' Guild of Great Britain in 1967, the year in which the guild opened the British Music Information Centre in Stratford Place in Central London, now a treasure trove of British 20th-century compositions.

After retiring from the London Repertoire in 1986, Gipps taught herself to play the organ. She also became musical director of the Heathfield Choral Society, near her home in East Sussex. In 1988 she conducted a well-received concert of music by women composers of the past 300 years at St John's, Smith Square.

In 1981 she was appointed MBE for her services to music. She is survived by her husband of 57 years, Robert Baker, a former clarinetist, and by their son.

DR CHARLES WARREN

Dr Charles Warren,
physician and mountaineer, died on March 30 aged 92. He was born on
April 15, 1906.

CHARLES WARREN coupled a lifelong love of mountains, literature and art with an eminent career in medicine. As a young and newly qualified houseman he gained leave from Bart's to join the three British attempts on Everest in the 1930s. (One of the hospital's senior surgeons at the time was Geoffrey Keynes, himself an enthusiastic climber and friend of George Mallory.)

All three expeditions were dogged by bad weather, and none came even close to success, but the experience roped Warren into the climbing elite of the day, along with such men as Shipton, Tilman, Smythe and Odele.

Warren came to the attention of the Everest Committee with his success on Marco Polo's expedition to the Gangothri district of the Himalayas in 1933, when he and Colin Kirkus reached the summit of Bhagirathi III. Their route demanded severe rock climbing at more than 21,000ft, an outstanding achievement and perhaps the most difficult technical climb in the Himalayas at that time.

The Everest attempts in 1933, '36 and '38 were on the Tibetan flank, and twice Warren reached the North Col only to be beaten back by the early arrival of the monsoon. He was a prudent judge of conditions, and not one to press on when faced with an avalanche sweeping the ascending tracks and tearing the north face of the mountain.

Even so, he and his companions made the first ascents of a number of lesser peaks in the Everest region. Quite recently he was delighted to receive a card from a university party exploring the same area in the hope of claiming virgin summits, only to find that Warren had beaten them to it years earlier.

On those early Everest attempts he became a close friend of one of the sherpas, and some 18 years later, after Sherpa Tenzing Norgay had conquered Everest with Hillary, the Warrens were delighted to welcome him to their home at Felsted in Essex.

Warren continued to climb until his early eighties, regularly visiting the Alps, twice travelling to Kenya and often to the Lake District and Scotland. Notable were his traverse of the Cullin Ridge at the age of 72, two Scottish ascents four years later in his 1938 Everest boots, and his final rock climb in the Lake District on his 80th birthday, properly celebrated with champagne on the summit.

During the war, Warren served as a physician at the emergency medical services hospital in Bishop's Cleeve, where he met his wife, Dorothy, who was a radiographer. He subsequently opted to specialise in paediatrics and was appointed consultant in Chelmsford and then to the staff at Colchester. For the rest of his clinical career, his area extended over a large part of Essex, and his main unit at Chelmsford became renowned for performing exchange blood transfusions on infants with neonatal jaundice.

His work with Peter Broughton made a great contribution to paediatrics by demonstrating the benefits of ultraviolet light on jaundiced infants, so reducing the need for exchange transfusions. Later he and Broughton collaborated with Walsh in meticulous studies of the management of patients with Wilson's disease, first using penicillamine and subsequently with other chelating agents. Added to this heavy clinical load was a full role as administrator.

Even after his retirement he took on responsibility for developing the excellent medical library facilities the unit now enjoys.

But beyond his medical career there remained his enduring delight in mountains and in the art and literature that they have inspired. He had a long association with the Wordsworth Trust at Dove Cottage, Grasmere, where he pursued his interest in the Romantic writers and poets — especially Wordsworth, Byron, Shelley and Mary Shelley — who visited the Alps and helped to form a fuller appreciation of them.

Warren was a man of relatively modest means, but his acquisitions as a collector demonstrated a shrewd eye for quality. He presented more than 200 items — including both texts and pictures relating to the Romantic movement — to the Wordsworth Trust. The pictures include Gainsborough's Langdale Pikes, David Cox's oil of Crossing Morecambe Sands and a late Turner watercolour of Lake Como. There are also excellent watercolours by Edward Dayes of Haaves Water and of Derwent Water, and some exquisite drawings, such as those of Borrowdale by George Barrett Jr and Joshua Cristall.

Warren also presented important pictures by Ruskin to the Alpine Club. He was an honorary member and vice-president of the club and an indefatigable curator of its pictures. A kindly, good-humoured man, he wound the three strands of his interests — mountains, medicine and art — into a life of achievement.

His wife predeceased him by seven years. There were no children.

AMBROISE ROUX

Ambroise Roux, French
industrialist, died on April 4 aged 77. He was born on June 26, 1921.

AMBROISE ROUX was for decades the ultimate man of influence in the overlapping world of French politics and business. He was by turns outspoken, cunning and arrogant, but above all a connoisseur of the good things in life, from cigars to beautiful women. He created a mighty lobby of bosses and was consulted by presidents and prime ministers of Right and Left. He was relied on by fellow tycoons for advice on tricky legislation, particularly tax laws, and for help in seeing off hostile bids. He was extremely successful in wringing concessions from governments, particularly on corporate taxes and stock options.

He may have preached the need for greater globalisation of French business and the primacy of profits, but Roux was at heart a Paris-based networker par excellence. He defended the old order of the patronat, particularly at the time of the massive wave of nationalisations of banks and companies by the new Socialist Government in 1982. That wave included Roux's own Compagnie Générale d'Electricité, a large conglomerate producing turbines for the state electricity utility, locomotives for French Railways, telephone exchanges for the post office and much more.

François Mitterrand, the Socialist President, was quoted at the time as saying that he could rule France with 300 people. Roux put his own estimate of "those who count" at 20 to 30. He wasted no time after the takeovers, hiring the Hotel Crillon in Paris for the founding meeting of his Association Française des Entreprises Privées (AFEP).

Almost single-handedly he rallied the dispirited, dispossessed bosses, persuading them to wait for better days. These came finally with the first wave of privatisations of 1986-88, after the Gaullists and their allies had regained control of the National Assembly. The privatisations were conducted by the new conservative Finance Minister Edouard Balladur, who had been employed by Roux during his period out of office. Balladur continued the process as Prime Minister in 1992-95.

Roux was particularly close to President Georges Pompidou. Both men, erudite and bon vivant, liked to pose occasionally as wily Auvergne peasants, a kind of private joke. During the 1970s, Roux was officially President-Director-General of CGE (later Alcatel) and unofficially French Minister of Industry.

He usually had a big say in government-led industrial restructuring. The young Jacques Chirac, then in Pompidou's "cabinet", became an early admirer of Roux's backroom skill at achieving consensus. Many of the captains of industry in France today owe much to Roux's early patronage or career advice, and in return they hastened to appoint him to their boards.

Ambroise Roux was the only son of a rich company director who had married a member of the Poulenc family, one half of the later Rhône-Poulenc pharmaceutical giant. He attended the Ecole Polytechnique, and when the school moved to Lyons in 1940, Roux met a future business ally in Guy Dejouany, who later ran Compagnie Générale des Eaux, another big conglomerate, now Vivendi. Jean-Marie Messier, the current Vivendi chairman, is a one-time Roux protégé. After a short period in ministerial office during the Fourth Republic, Roux was hired by an old schoolfriend at the Compagnie Générale d'Electricité (CGE) and rose to the top without ever investing a single franc in his own company.

In 1969, he divided up a whole industrial sector, keeping trains and turbines plus telephone equipment for CGE, but leaving armaments to his rival, Thomson. He tried and failed later to corner both the nuclear and computer markets in France.

His AFEP lobby became the most powerful in the country with prominent patrons queuing to join. "These people don't really know one another until I brought them together," he said once. The organisation now has the 60 top French businessmen as members.

But as the business world became less cosy, Roux gradually began to lose his hold. He championed the maintenance of old-style cross-shareholdings between big companies, arrangements designed to block outsiders seeking to break into the club. But these core shareholdings, or noyaux durs, fell out of favour as a much more aggressive form of capitalism gained ground in France, as is evident in the current French banking wars and the fierce fight between the luxury-goods tycoons Pinault and Arnault. Roux could no longer keep these people in check, although he sat on almost all their boards.

Late in life he developed a passion for the parramoral, about which he wrote books. That obsession and his royalist views were considered quaint eccentricities, but his recent endorsement of a right-wing alliance to include the extreme right Front National lost him support and he was being eased out of AFEP at the time of his death.

He is survived by his wife, a son and a daughter.

GAINSBOROUGH RECOVERED

We have received the following statement: "The portrait by Gainsborough of the Duchess of Devonshire, which was stolen from the premises of Messrs. Thomas Agnew and Sons so long ago as 1876, has been discovered; and we understand that within a short time it will again be in the possession of the well known firm in Bond Street."

"The Criminal Investigation Department of Scotland Yard ascertained that the stolen canvas was hidden in a town in the western States of America, and the English officials, acting in conjunction with Mr. W.A. Pinkerton, of the National Detective Agency of Chicago, informed Messrs. Agnew of the fact. One of the partners immediately proceeded to America to identify the picture, and he is now on his way to London with it in his custody. "It will be remembered that this painting was purchased at the Wynn Ellis sale for £10,605, a sum which up to that date was the highest ever paid at Christie's for a single picture. The canvas was cut out of its frame one night while on exhibition in Bond Street, and all efforts have hitherto proved fruitless to discover it."

At 6 o'clock yesterday evening Mr. C.

ON THIS DAY

April 9, 1901

How a famous Gainsborough portrait, stolen from Agnews in London in 1876, was finally recovered from America after clever work by Scotland Yard and Pinkerton's, the famous American detective agency.

Moreland Agnew arrived at his residence, Westbourne Terrace, bringing from America the long-lost portrait. The picture was removed from the train at Willesden for safety and was at once taken to Messrs. Agnew's bankers. Mr. Moreland Agnew told a Press representative that he had not the slightest doubt about the genuineness of the picture. He added that he went out to the States about three weeks ago to try to identify the painting. This he had done at Chicago.

Mr. W. Locken Agnew said that he had seen the picture which his cousin had brought over, and he was certain that it was the one stolen from his firm. He said that there was no foundation for the story about his firm's having paid a reward of £5,000 for the recovery of the painting; it would not amount to £1,000, in fact, he did not think they would have to pay much.

A Reuter telegram, dated New York, April 8, states: "The circumstances of the recovery of Gainsborough's lost Duchess are as follows: Detective William Pinkerton was in conversation with Pat Sheedy when the latter related the manner in which he had been able to repay an obligation which had rested on him for years, and mentioned the name of the man to whom he had been indebted. At this point Pinkerton exclaimed: 'This is the man who stole the Gainsborough.' Sheedy immediately volunteered to secure the return of the picture if proper arrangements could be made. Sheedy said his friend had turned over a new leaf and was now living honestly in England. He was the father of children who were nearly grown up and were ignorant of their father's offence. Sheedy first exacted a promise from Pinkerton that no attempt should be made to discover the identity of his friend while Sheedy was opening the negotiations. He made a trip to England and found that his friend was more than willing to permit the return of the picture."

Euroland's bold half-point cut catches out financial markets

Bank and ECB reduce rates

EUROPEAN markets yesterday received a double boost as both the European Central Bank and the Bank of England decided to cut their respective interest rates.

While the Bank of England's decision to reduce base rates by a further quarter point to 5.25 per cent had been widely expected, the ECB's half-point cut took the markets by complete surprise.

It was the first time that the ECB has used its powers to alter rates, reducing its key refinancing rate from 3 per cent to 2.5 per cent. The Swiss

National Bank also decided to remain in step with the ECB, cutting its discount rate from 1 to 0.5 per cent, its lowest ever.

Although the ECB has been under heavy political pressure to trim rates almost since the single currency was launched on January 1, the ECB had until recently seemed set against any reduction in rates.

Wim Duisenberg, President of the ECB, yesterday insisted that the decision to cut rates did not represent a change in policy and had won the backing of a "large majority" on the ECB's 17-strong governing council. "The decision taken today keeps monetary policy on a longer-term stability-oriented course and, by doing so, contributes to creating an economic environment in which the considerable growth potential of the euro area could be exploited," Mr Duisenberg said shortly after the decision.

However, he added that the ECB had chosen to make a larger than expected cut in rates because it wanted to end market expectations of a further cut. "I would like to be sure that it is," he said, rejecting claims that the Bank had refrained from making an earlier cut in rates because of concerns about the value of the euro, which has depreciated by as much as 10 per cent against the dollar during its brief lifespan.

"We are not at all dissatisfied with the level of the euro," Mr Duisenberg said.

The half-point cut came too late to boost equity markets but sent the euro higher on foreign exchanges at once. It jumped to $1.08 at one stage but failed to hold its gains, quickly slipping back towards $1.078, only marginally above the day's lows. Traders, however, said that the rate cut could improve the euro's short-term outlook as it would boost confidence in the European economy.

The pound also made strong gains against the dollar with traders concluding that the MPC's sixth reduction in seven months had greatly enhanced the chances of a soft landing for the economy.

The pound climbed a cent and a half against the dollar to close at $1.608 while the euro fell from 67.66p to 67.25p.

The stock market, however, gave only a muted reception to the cut with shares falling victim to profit-taking after the record-breaking run earlier this week. The FTSE 100 index of leading shares closed down 35.3 at 6,437.9.

Analysts are increasingly convinced that the Bank is close to the bottom of the rate-cutting cycle with the consensus that the MPC will reduce rates by only a further quarter point this year.

The fact that the Bank did not publish an explanatory statement with its rate decision was seized on as evidence that the decision was close run with perhaps only a bare majority of the MPC in favour of a further cut.

Industry and unions gave the decision only a lukewarm welcome, claiming that with the pound still highly valued it would do little to relieve the pressure on exporters.

L'Oreal springs sales surprise

By CARL MORTISHED

L'OREAL, the French cosmetics and pharmaceuticals firm, stunned the market yesterday by revealing a near-10 per cent rise in sales in the first quarter.

The company, which owns the Lancôme, Laboratoires Garnier and Maybelline brands, increased sales in local currencies by 14.6 per cent. After currency losses, revenues were up 9.5 per cent to Fr17.1 billion (£1.76 billion).

Evidence that L'Oréal is continuing to gain market share sent the company's stock soaring 4.5 per cent on the Paris bourse and renewed speculation that it might take on Revlon, its struggling rival.

Revlon has hired Goldman Sachs and Lazard Frères to advise on disposals after a slide in earnings caused a share price collapse last year. However, analysts were sceptical yesterday about a L'Oréal takeover, pointing out that the French company is already strong in make-up. Revlon's core business.

L'Oréal's first-quarter boost followed a big rise last year when cosmetics surged 10.6 per cent, including a 20 per cent rise in the UK.

Sainsbury's to shed 300 jobs from Savacentre

By SARAH CUNNINGHAM, RETAIL CORRESPONDENT

J SAINSBURY is set to announce up to 300 redundancies after deciding to close the headquarters of Savacentre. It will be the first significant job cuts at the group, Britain's second-largest supermarket operator, for five years.

Staff at the Savacentre head office in Wokingham have been told that they will hear the results of an 18-month long review of the business on Monday. Sainsbury's refused to comment last night on its plans for the business.

The move comes as Sainsbury's, along with Britain's other supermarkets, found itself in the firing line as John Bridgeman, Director-General of Fair Trading, formally announced that he was referring the sector to the Competition Commission for a full investigation.

Sainsbury's, which admitted after Christmas that trading had fallen away and that its

John Cleese-led advertising campaign had gone wrong, has been trialling a new look for Savacentre at its Calcutt store. The 13 stores in the chain — which was intended to be the group's version of a continental hypermarket — have far lower margins and sales per square foot than the Sainsbury's supermarkets. The trial look has more food and less clothing and other non-food goods.

The Savacentres will be run from Sainsbury's main head office in Central London. About 80 jobs will have to be created to do the work.

One analyst said that the cost-cutting would be welcomed by the market. "Savacentre has not performed up to expectations. Net margins compared to similar-sized Tesco and Asda stores are not good."

The last round of job cuts at Sainsbury's came in March 1994 when 650 head and area office posts were axed.

The inquiry by the Competition Commission — the replacement to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission — will mean that Sainsbury's and Britain's other supermarkets will be under the microscope for the next 12 months.

Mr Bridgeman said he was concerned about barriers to entering the market, the impact of rising land costs, price competition, and the nature of the relationship between the supermarkets and their suppliers.

He also defended the techniques used by his officials in their eight-month inquiry. Dino Adriano, chief executive of Sainsbury's, attacked the research last week as "inadequate and inconclusive".

Mr Bridgeman said: "Sophisticated economic modelling is required to take into account the firms' levels of investment and risk. We have used a number of measures and have not exclusively relied upon any one indicator of profitability."

Mr Bridgeman stopped short of saying that the supermarkets were making excess profits. He said: "I have to conclude that there is a level of profitability here which requires further investigation by the Competition Commission."

Shell cuts exploration budget by up to $1bn

By CARL MORTISHED, INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS EDITOR

SHELL is tightening its belt with a cut of up to $1 billion (about £600 million) in its upstream exploration budget. The oil company yesterday told analysts and fund managers in New York that oil production was flat in the first quarter of the year but the company promised to meet its growth targets for the full year.

Shell has drastically cut investment in oil exploration and production, reflecting the tough environment and low oil prices. The company announced a capital budget for 1999 of $11 billion in December, of which $6 billion was earmarked for the upstream business. However, Shell indicated that it might rein in the budget by $1.75 billion if oil prices remained weak. Yesterday, Phil Watts, group managing director, confirmed that capital investment would be down on the December figure.

Mr Watts said that Shell should achieve cost savings of $300 million in the current year, part of a $1.1 billion target of cost-savings for exploration and production to be achieved by 2001.

The oil company is investing $900 million developing the Brutus field in the Gulf of Mexico with the construction of a tension leg platform, expected to lift 100,000 barrels per day from the 200 million barrel field.

Shell announced $4.5 billion in asset write-downs in December and declared its intention to sell 40 per cent of its chemical portfolio, including a half share in Montell, the polypropylene business. The write-downs included $2 billion in oil-producing assets in California, Texas and Venezuela.

Yesterday, the company said it would sell stakes in certain deep water oil projects to share risk as well as a share in its prestigious Malampaya gas to power project in the Philippines. In addition a strategic partner is being sought for Shell's Venezuelan business.

Shell's annual report for 1998 reveals that Mark Moody-Stuart, the chairman, was paid just over £1 million last year, including £370,000 in realised gains from share options. His total package fell from £1.4 million in 1997.

Both Mr Moody-Stuart and Mr Watts received no bonus in 1998, a year in which Shell's net profits collapsed from $7.8 billion to just $400 million. Mr Moody-Stuart's base salary rose by 30 per cent in 1998 to £638,000 but a Shell spokesman said that the apparent increase in 1998 reflected his appointment as chairman half way through the 1997 financial year.

PocketPhone in talks with Palace

By CHRIS AYRES

THE financial woes of Crystal Palace Football Club, which was recently placed in administration with debts of £23 million, could soon be eased by one of Britain's largest mobile phone retailers, The PocketPhone Shop.

The company, headed by Simon Jordan, is negotiating a share sponsorship deal worth £750,000. Mr Jordan is also planning to buy up to a 25 per cent stake in the club, having offered to buy 5 per cent earlier this year for £1 million. He said: "That same kind of money will now buy me a much bigger stake. My aim is to wait until it comes out of administration."

Mr Jordan, 31, is also considering buying the 50 per cent stake in The PocketPhone Shop owned by his partner, Andrew Briggs, for an estimated £30 million.

Web hoax lifts PairGain

FROM ANDREW BUTCHER IN NEW YORK

WALL STREET thought it had a dream deal when a fast-moving Internet company was said to be on the end of a takeover bid. Shares of PairGain Technologies, a maker of high-speed Internet equipment, rocketed 35 per cent as dealers filled their boots.

The only problem was that the whole thing was an elaborate hoax. The share-buying frenzy was sparked by a report, purportedly from the Bloomberg financial news service, saying that PairGain would be taken over for $1.35 billion (£830 million).

The supposed report was drawn to the attention of Internet users at a website that discusses hot stocks, with the message: "Just found it on Bloomberg." The page looked and worked exactly like the Bloomberg Internet service.

The fraud was revealed by PairGain, whose chief financial officer, Charles McBrayer, said the fake was masterful:

"You'd swear on your mother it was a Bloomberg website."

The hoax is the latest in a line of cyber-swindles flogging Internet investors. Mr McBrayer said he assumed the person responsible on this occasion profited handsomely from the deception. "If you're going to go to this much trouble, you might as well make money on it," he said.

Despite the dismissal of the story as a hoax PairGain shares were up 10 per cent at the close.

Gucci rejects new offer

By SARAH CUNNINGHAM

GUCCI, the Italian fashion house, yesterday rejected an increased takeover offer from LVMH, the French luxury goods group, saying it came with "unacceptable" conditions.

But it added that it was "willing to continue discussions with LVMH to consider an offer that is in the best interests of the company, its shareholders and all stakeholders". LVMH said in response that no further talks were planned before the court hearing on April 22 in the battle for control of Gucci.

LVMH had said it was prepared to increase its $81 (£50.60) per share takeover offer for Gucci to $85, but only if Gucci issued new shares. The proposed share issue would dilute other large shareholders and enable LVMH to control the company by buying just half of the 34 per cent of the shares in public hands.

Gucci tried to preserve its independence from LVMH, after it built up a 35 per cent stake in January, by issuing new shares to dilute LVMH's holding. It then sold 40 per cent of the enlarged share base to French retail group PPR. This made it virtually impossible for LVMH to make a successful takeover bid unless PPR agreed. LVMH said an alternative offer of $91 a share, which required the PPR sale to be annulled, had also been rejected.

Stationery Office in demerger moves

By ROBERT LEA

THE STATIONERY OFFICE (TSO), the privatised former HMSO, has demerged into four operational companies as a precursor to separate flotations or sell-offs, which will net big profits for its chairman, Rupert Pennington-Rea, and Electra Fleming, the City financiers.

The business — best known as the publisher of government documents, The Highway Code and as the printer of passports — yesterday reported a 45 per cent rise in operating profits last year to £18 million, demonstrating a dramatic turnaround in fortunes. HMSO was privatised two-and-a-half years ago after accumulating losses of £90 million. Electra Fleming paid £54 million and raised another £71 million to fund investment.

TSO said it had completed a restructuring which gives operating independence to its four businesses: government publishing; Banner office supplies; document management, newly named Tactics; and security printing. Ownership of the companies remains unchanged.

A spokesperson for TSO said it is looking at all future options, including separate flotations or selling the divisions to trade buyers.

The business as a whole could command a price tag of about £200 million. At the time of the flotation Mr Pennington-Rea, the former Deputy Governor of the Bank of England who resigned after a tabloid kiss-and-tell scandal four years ago, and three senior colleagues including the group chief executive, Bob Thian, are thought to have paid about £500,000 for a 10 per cent stake. Existing managers and employees received a further 10 per cent holding.

The group executive team will now break up, with Mr Thian, a former chief executive of North West Water, remaining only as a non-executive director of Tactics, the largest of the four businesses. Mr Pennington-Rea, however, will stay as chairman of each of the four companies.

TSO said that after interest charge and a £2.5 million charge for the demerger, group pre-tax profits for 1998 came in at £10.3 million on turnover slightly down at £261 million. It made dividend payments to its shareholders of £4.9 million (£3.6 million).

The privatisation of the HMSO was dogged by controversy, with original government plans to sell the operations for about £100 million falling apart when due diligence investigations revealed black holes in the balance sheet. The National Audit Office later ruled that HMSO had been sold too cheaply.

ONDigital claims lead in battle for subscribers

By RAYMUND SNOODY, MEDIA EDITOR

ONDIGITAL, the digital terrestrial television service, said yesterday that it had chalked up 110,000 subscribers since its autumn launch and announced that it was planning to boost numbers by "premiering" top ITV programmes before they are shown on the ITV network.

ONDigital is a 50-50 venture by Carlton Communications and Granada, the two largest ITV companies. United News & Media, the third-largest, is also involved in digital terrestrial.

The news of programme specials and the better than expected subscription figures, plus the launch in June of a £500 ONDigital integrated television set came as a boost for Granada and Carlton. In a falling market, Granada shares rose 44p to £13.50, while Carlton was up 20p at 634p.

Stephen Grabiner, chief executive of ONDigital, claimed that the 110,000 subscription figure meant that "like for like we have signed up more new subscribers to digital TV than Sky".

In its first four months on air BSkyB, in which News International, owner of The Times, has a 40 per cent stake, signed up 350,000 households to the SkyDigital service. Of that, 120,000 were new to multi-channel television.

ONDigital claimed the "like-for-like" lead because it is available in about only 70 per cent of the country.

SkyDigital has set a target of one million digital subscribers by October, the end of its first year. ONDigital declined to set a target other than to say that it was meeting its business plan.

ONDigital said that it would break even when it has two million subscribers and that three million subscribers would produce an operating profit of £100 million a year; five million subscribers would bring profits of £250 million.

Pre-launch costs were £57 million, less than the £80 million expected, but marketing expenditure rose from £40 million to £90 million.

Of its plans with ITV, ONDigital revealed that it will be showing the final series of the long-running Inspector Morse before it appears on ITV, while Prime Suspect specials and a final series of Gladiators will be broadcast before their appearance on ITV.

A continuing series of such specials is expected although agreement with ITV will be on a one-off basis.

Alba, which plans to manufacture 100,000 of the ONDigital integrated Bush TV sets this year, saw its shares rise 34p to 299p.

Media Times, page 41

SILENTNIGHT HOLDINGS, the UK's biggest bed and cabinet furniture maker, whose chief executive is Bill Simpson, above, said poor retail demand for cabinet furniture left profits flat last year after sales at its Meredew subsidiary were "totally inadequate". Pre-tax profit was £16.3 million (£16.5 million) for the year ended January 30, 1999, on turnover of £236 million (£229 million). The final dividend of 8.3p (8.2p) takes the total for the year to 12.0p (11.5p).

SFA fines three for breaching trading rules

By GAVIN LUMSDEN

THE Securities and Futures Authority yesterday imposed fines and costs exceeding £58,000 on three individuals for serious breaches of City trading rules.

Baljeet Janjua, the former co-head of Swiss Bank Corporation's global asset swap group, was fined £30,000 and was ordered to pay £9,280 costs after forging a letter in order to complete a trade in a ¥4 billion (£20 million) Japanese medium-term note.

After receiving an internal directive to reduce SBC's positions in October 1997, Mr Janjua asked Riad Meliti, a junior member of the investment bank's Middle East desk, to sell the security.

After it was found difficult to sell, Mr Janjua agreed to make the security more attractive by attaching a "put" option, which would have enabled a buyer to sell the note back to SBC at the original price if markets fell.

Although this did nothing to cut SBC's risk exposure, Mr Janjua confirmed the offer by signing an unauthorised letter on SBC headed paper. SBC subsequently discovered and withdrew the deal. Mr Meliti has been reprimanded, fined £2,000 and ordered to pay £2,330 costs by the SFA.

In a second case, the SFA severely reprimanded Leslie Terrence Commons, a former inter-dealer broker with Cantor Fitzgerald International, and fined him £10,000, plus £5,000 costs, for trying to conceal £123,000 (£77,000) of losses incurred by Cantors in trades he did in Italian government bonds on November 13, 1997.

BUSINESS ROUNDUP

Australians block Coke acquisition

COCA-COLA, the soft drinks group, yesterday suffered a setback in its acquisition of rival Cadbury Schweppes' brands outside the US, when the Australian competition authority blocked the deal. The US$1.85 billion (£1.1 billion) purchase, announced in December, involves Schweppes beverage brands in 120 countries outside the US, France and South Africa. Competition watchdogs in each of those countries must clear the deal.

The Australian Competition and Consumer Commission said that the acquisition was likely to breach its merger laws and "would be likely to eliminate any real prospect of effective future competition" in the Australian soft drinks market. It said the deal would take Coca-Cola's share of the country's market from 65 per cent to 75 per cent. Analysts said Coca-Cola is likely to offer to sell some of its non-international brands in Australia to get round the regulator. City Diary, page 31

Electra under fire

ELECTRA INVESTMENT TRUST has come under further fire from 3i Group, the venture capitalist which is making a £1.25 billion hostile takeover bid for the company. 3i said yesterday that Electra shareholders should question price comparisons their company has made between 3i's offer and Electra's share buyback. 3i said that, had Electra used 3i's closing price when it made its announcement on Wednesday, it would have valued 3i's offer at 742p, not 725p as Electra stated.

ICI company in MBO

ICI yesterday took a small step in its disposal programme by selling a chemicals trading business to its management. Chance & Hunt, based at Runcorn, buys in chemicals from more than 100 producers and sells them to businesses. It mainly serves UK companies and those located in the UK. The business last year had sales of £40 million and employed 46 people. The management buyout team plans to keep all the employees. ICI is trying to sell all its industrial chemicals operations and to turn itself into a consumer-oriented group.

Laird counter-attack

LAIRD GROUP yesterday moved to counter a sharp drop in last year's profits with news that it had rallied in the first three months of this year. The engineer saw pre-tax profits before exceptional charges last year to £40.3 million from £69.6 million as it suffered problems in its car body sealing division. With one-off charges for restructuring and the sale of businesses, Laird's profits fell further to £23.7 million. Earnings per share fell from 36.2p to 9.3p. The dividend was increased to 15p from 14.3p. Tempus, page 30

Job losses at Saga

SAGA PETROLEUM is laying off 40 staff in the UK as the Norwegian oil company launches a worldwide retrenchment in an attempt to save £740 million (£33 million) a year, a reduction in overhead of 20 per cent. The company, which has a one-fifth share in the Britannia field in the North Sea, is cutting 430 jobs worldwide and yesterday said that it would pull out of Angola, where it has an interest in Block 1. A spokesman said that further exploration had become too expensive.

Bell issues pathfinder

BELL GROUP, a provider of closed-circuit television surveillance, intruder detection, access control and fire alarm systems for banks, yesterday issued its pathfinder prospectus for a full listing on the London Stock Exchange. The group, whose chief executive is Patrick Curran, a former executive with Thorn Security Group, is looking to raise £8 million from the sale of 30 per cent of the company. Last year it had operating profits of £3.8 million on turnover of £34 million.

Life insurers face £14bn bill

By GAVIN LUMSDEN

BRITISH life insurers could be hit with a £14 billion bill to cover the cost of guaranteed annuity options given to policyholders since the 1970s, Standard & Poor's says.

The credit rating agency said this figure, which is already £3 billion higher than estimated, could reach £28 billion if long-term interest rates continue to slide.

This would dwarf the provisions of £14 billion to £18 billion that life insurers are making against the pensions mis-selling scandal and would sharply reduce the industry's total surplus, put at £78 billion in 1997.

Insurers have only recently woken up to the scale of the problem they face with guaranteed annuities, which allow their policyholders to take a retirement income of about 11 per cent on their savings compared with the 8 per cent offered by the best conventional annuities today.

In an unusually grave report, Standard & Poor's gave warning that life insurers' statutory solvency for 1998 would be "significantly" affected.

Technical reserves in some cases would have to be doubled, the agency said, while some insurers would see their financial strength ratings drop.

Although shareholders were likely to be shielded from the impact, millions of policyholders would suffer lower bonus rates and smaller returns as companies sought to cope with the extra financial burden. The growing pressure would also accelerate the pace of takeovers of small and medium-sized mutual insurers, the report said. Last year NPI fell to AMP, the Australian insurer, after being fatally weakened by its exposure to guaranteed annuities.

Of the 16 large insurers surveyed by Standard & Poor's, only Equitable Life has so far been explicitly affected.

FirstGroup gets GAG

By PAUL ARMSTRONG

FIRSTGROUP, the bus and train operator, has paid £10.6 million for GAG, which runs 400 buses in the South West.

GAG, which reported an annual operating profit of £506,000, is not expected to contribute to FirstGroup's earnings until 2000. FirstGroup will satisfy the purchase with £27 million cash, £5.2 million in loan notes and by issuing 657,734 shares. It will also inherit GAG's net debt of £2.9 million.

FirstGroup said GAG's fleet had an average age of 11 to 12 years compared with eight years for FirstGroup's buses. However, it said it was too early to estimate the cost of the upgrade of the GAG fleet. Tempus, page 30

MPC winning on points

COMMENTARY
by our City Editor

So the European Central Bank does maintain a grasp of economic reality after all. For three months, the ECB has seemed to delight in informing the suffering inhabitants — not to say struggling politicians — of the core European countries that there was nothing wrong with the euroland economy. It was a display of monetary virility that not even Oskar Lafontaine, the former German Finance Minister, could challenge.

No sooner is Herr Lafontaine ushered into the political wilderness than the ECB proves that it can not only cut rates, but actually wrong-foot the market in its generosity. Wim Duisenberg, President of the ECB, insisted yesterday that the half-point cut had been chosen to signal that there would be no further rate reductions. Perhaps, but it also provides the booster that an economy that is desperately short of confidence badly needed. With an almost total absence of inflationary pressures in the eurozone, a half-point cut is no more of a gamble than the expected quarter point would have been.

The half point is a tactic that the Bank of England has also learnt to employ. The three half-point cuts that the Bank has instituted in the past seven months have spurred the rapid turnaround seen in the service and retail sectors of the economy faster than six quarter points could have done. A half-point cut makes a noticeable difference and consumers, in particular, have responded extremely positively to the sharp decline in mortgage rates. Confidence has returned to levels not seen since the first half of last year. Dangerous concepts such as "housing boom" are even beginning to creep back into the economic vocabulary.

The Bank's decision yesterday to return to only inching rates lower may well have been influenced by this sharp rise in consumer confidence. The Bank's departure from normal practice in not publishing an explanatory note to enlighten us on the reasons for its rate reduction certainly suggests that the Monetary Policy Committee vote was a close-run thing and rates are now clearly near their trough.

And it may be that, with its meagre cut, the Bank will have succeeded in easing the lot of industry a little without risking sending consumers on an inflationary spree. For the first time since the Bank's rate-cutting spree began in the autumn, lenders resisted the temptation to automatically pass on the gains to homeowners. The financial services companies are increasingly aware of the predicament of savers who have seen their rates dwindle to often sub-inflation levels. A half-point cut would have probably forced lenders to offer at least a partial reduction in mortgage loan rates, but yesterday's quarter-point reduction has allowed them for the moment to leave rates unchanged.

Fine-tuning is a notoriously difficult business, but the MPC might just have managed it.

OFT bites hand that feeds UK

John Bridgeman could not have offered a clearer invitation to foreign grocers than he did yesterday. He might as well have stood on the White Cliffs, blaring through a megaphone that overseas supermarket operators would be guaranteed a welcome if they would promise to come to Britain and stop Tesco doing so well. Should one of them be tempted to launch a bid for Asda, Sainsbury or even Sainsbury, they are now assured that there would be no competition from a national player.

In subjecting the grocery business to a Monopolies Commission inquiry destined to last at least a year, the Director-General of Fair Trading has effectively put paid to any mergers among the big players. But if a Carrefour or a Walmart should become the proud owner of a British company, it might not exhibit the care and concern for British suppliers that food manufacturers and farmers might hope.

Those Welsh lamb producers would be unlikely to find Carrefour a more supportive customer than Sainsbury. As the French Government tries to encourage three banks to come together to form a national champion, which would be the biggest bank in the world, our European partners must puzzle as to why Britain seems so keen to weaken its own players. Mr Bridgeman says he is concerned that there are "significant barriers to new competitors in high-volume grocery retailing in Britain". Yet in recent years continental discounters have marched into this country and now have more than 850 outlets. Aldi, Netto and Lidl fight at the bottom end of the market, where price, not range or quality, is the overriding consideration.

Mr Bridgeman cites the cost of land and property as a barrier to newcomers but a Carrefour or Walmart has deep pockets. That they have chosen not to battle to open full-scale supermarkets in Britain could just be because they do not see rich pickings to be had from challenging the existing stores. Even the researches of McKinsey found that the Brits were not doing a bad job.

But the Government had decided that the supermarket giants were a good target and Mr Bridgeman has obliged. It would be a dangerous course if the OFT and the MMC were to become agents of Government, but one cannot help but feel that, when the MMC deliberations are concluded, the desire will be for some findings that will provide good material for Alastair Campbell's spinning wheel.

Raising the bidding in the fashion stakes

It may not be impossible to win a contested bid when 42 per cent of the shares are held by a single rival but it certainly is not easy. So the ingenious Bernard Arnault has come up with the idea of asking Gucci to move the goal posts in his favour. The amazingly accommodating Dutch company law would sanction such a move but, not surprisingly, Gucci is not inclined to do so.

In the battle of the handbags, M Arnault's desire to get hold of Gucci is pushing him to up the price of the luxury brand to truly luxurious levels. But he is not about to put his $5 billion on the table unless he thinks the deal is his. Francois Pinault may be insisting that his rapidly acquired 42 per cent does not give him control of Gucci but it puts him in a pretty powerful position. Having failed with his request for a few extra shares yesterday, M Arnault is now hoping that he can persuade the courts to remove the obstacle of the Pinault stake.

The energetic M Arnault will not be idle in the meantime. He and his team of three banks will soon start canvassing the smaller shareholders in Gucci, asking them whether they would not like the chance to accept his cash instead of risking seeing the shares fall back to the less luxurious levels where they languished before LVMH stepped in.

But since M Arnault seems to want Gucci with all the intensity that fashion freaks pursue Tom Ford's latest creation, the minority holders may prefer to sit tight and hope for more.

Vyner touch

WHEN Tom Vyner was a top director of J Sainsbury, suppliers would quake as they headed towards Stamford Street. He had not swallowed the idea of "partnership culture", Mr Vyner believed in the adversarial way of doing business. And perhaps it still works. In a cute move, Lindsay Owen-Jones snapped up Mr Vyner on his retirement from Sainsbury. The result is that L'Oréal has boosted British sales by a fifth, much of it through the supermarkets. You can bet he got a good price, too.

Swallow moves to sell all its tenanted pubs

By DOMINIC WALSH

SWALLOW GROUP yesterday confirmed that it has put all 664 of its tenanted pubs up for sale in a move that will raise funds to expand its hotel and managed pub divisions.

The announcement came after the recent collapse of negotiations to sell 350 of Swallow's tenanted pubs and its Vaux and Ward's breweries to a management buyout team for £63 million. Failing the last-minute appearance of a fresh bidder, the breweries will close on July 2.

Analysts believe that once Swallow's exit from brewing and tenanted pubs is complete, the company will become a sitting duck for potential predators. Last year, it rejected approaches from both Stalks and Whitbread.

Swallow said that it has asked its advisers, BT Alex Brown and Noble Grossart, to sell all its tenanted pubs after receiving expressions of interest for them. It added that it would consider offers for "all or part of the estate, with or without the breweries".

One of the parties to have expressed an interest in all 664 pubs was Alchemy Partners, the venture capitalist behind the abortive management buyout. Last week, in a last-ditch attempt to save the deal, it offered £125 million for the entire package, including the two breweries, but Swallow rejected the price as inadequate.

The tenanted estate, described by one rival as "a hugely mixed bag" has a book value of just over £100 million, although Peter Catesby, Swallow's chief executive, believes it could be worth up to £130 million.

There is unlikely to be any shortage of interest. Both Mansfield Brewery and Harveys & Hansons, the Nottingham brewer, are thought to be eyeing the Ward's brewery in Sheffield plus 196 pubs that carry the Ward's badge. Among the possible bidders for larger parts of the estate are Pubmaster, Enterprise Inns and, despite its recent rebuff, Alchemy Partners. Nomura and Punch Taverns are also being mentioned as possible buyers.

The disposals would leave Swallow Group with 37 Swallow Hotels and 175 managed pubs, some of which trade under the Barenton and Bramwell & Co brands. Mr Catesby said that the disposals should provide sufficient funds to allow him to make "some really quite serious acquisitions".

However, most observers believe that it is only a matter of time before Swallow attracts the vultures. One analyst said: "I doubt whether anyone will make a move until the hornet's nest of the breweries and tenancies is safely out of the way. But it then becomes a nice clean company with some very attractive assets."

Swallow's shares shed 3p to 268½p.

Tempus gives warning on potential hostile bid

By CHRIS AYRES

CHRIS INGRAM, chairman of Tempus, yesterday gave warning that any hostile takeover bid for the advertising group from WPP, its arch-rival, would "destroy the value" of the company.

His comments were prompted by WPP's 18 per cent stake in the business, which has provoked City speculation that the marketing services company could make a bid for Tempus.

Mr Ingram said: "We're enjoying what we're doing, and we have a long-term track record. Anything that got in the way of that, such as a hostile bid, would destroy the value of the asset that the bidder was trying to get hold of. I know what the key people in this business want."

Tempus yesterday reported a 40 per cent rise in pre-tax profits for the year to December 31, 1998, to £13.2 million, on sales of £1.2 billion, up 27 per cent. Earnings per share rose 15 per cent to 10.8p, and the company said that on June 4 it would pay a final dividend of 2.37p, making a total for year of 3.1p — an increase of 14 per cent on the previous year.

Mr Ingram said: "We anticipate that there will be good development opportunities during the year, both regionally in the US and Asia, and in the new media and marketing research sectors. Overall we are confident of another year of satisfactory progress."

Waterfall to hit back with results

By DOMINIC WALSH

WATERFALL HOLDINGS, which this week launched a hostile £41 million bid for European Leisure, is to bring forward its half-year results in an attempt to defuse doubts over the value of its all-paper offer. European, which rejected the bid and is pressing ahead with a recommended offer from Allied Leisure, had cast doubts on the profitability of its snooker and pool cue rival, saying that its offer failed to contain a profit forecast or any comment on current trading.

Waterfall said it would accelerate release of the figures, which would show "an entirely satisfactory result for the first half". It also poured scorn on criticism of its accounting practices, claiming: "Waterfall has consistently adopted more conservative accounting policies than European in relation to the depreciation of freehold and long leasehold assets."

Waterfall's shares were off 1½p to 55p yesterday, valuing its offer at 112p a share. European's shares rose just 6p to 91p. The bid from Allied, whose shares rose ½p to 24½p, is currently worth 89p a share.

Poon boosts Harvey Nichols

By SARAH CUNNINGHAM, RETAIL CORRESPONDENT

Poon: restructuring assets

SHARES in Harvey Nichols yesterday rose by more than 3 per cent on hopes that complex restructuring plans announced by Dickson Poon, its Hong Kong-based chairman, could lead to him, or an outside bidder, buying the luxury department store group.

Dickson Concepts, the Hong Kong retail and property group owning 50.1 per cent of Harvey Nichols, is to sell all its non-Asian assets into a company owned by Mr Poon. Shares in Harvey Nichols closed 6½p up at 195p, their highest since last summer. Mr Poon bought the business in 1991 for £51 million and listed it on the London Stock Exchange in 1996. At yesterday's price, it is worth £107 million.

Mr Poon said that the latest move, which will cost him HK$1.38 billion (£111 million), is designed to ringfence shareholders in Dickson Concepts from exposure to the heavy investment programme he has planned for his European business, made up mainly of Harvey Nichols and ST Dupont, a French luxury goods operation. Shares in Dickson Concepts have performed poorly on the Hong Kong stock exchange amid worries about its Asian businesses.

Harvey Nichols, which also runs restaurants, including one at London's Oxo Tower, has stores in London and Leeds. It is to open a third in Edinburgh, and is looking at a fourth in Manchester or Newcastle. It is rumoured to be also considering a store in the City of London.

In restructuring his business empire, Mr Poon proposes to lift his stake in Dickson Concepts from 51.9 per cent to as much as 75 per cent.

There can be few more potent examples of how peace is changing the Middle East than Omah Salah. At 31, he is the chief executive of Century Investment Group, Jordan's largest industrial company. His ten factories make underwear for Marks & Spencer, casual clothes for the Gap and Banana Republic chains and cork caps for Pepsi Cola bottles. However, the big surprise is that almost all of this is either sold to Israel or exported in joint ventures with Israeli companies.

The company, which reported a turnover of £62 million last year, has been called "a role model for the future of the Middle East" by Stuart Eizenstat, US Under Secretary of State. Yet Salah founded it just four years ago on a whim.

"I was stuck in a traffic jam in Los Angeles, listening to the news on the radio. Suddenly I realized that this transitional period in the Middle East, from conflict to peace, had fantastic business potential," says the entrepreneur, who was educated at Pangbourne College in Berkshire.

Manufacturing progress out of peace

Salah left his job and headed back to Amman. Overcoming his own prejudices, he made his way to Israel — which then had no official ties with Jordan — and called the offices of large Israeli companies. Several Israeli chief executives agreed to see the young Jordanian out of curiosity.

After the signing of the peace agreement between Jordan and Israel in October 1994, Salah's unorthodox methods began to bear fruit. Dov Lautman, managing director of Delta Galil, the Israeli textile giant, agreed to set up a factory in Jordan which Salah would run. Delta has annual sales of £190 million and produces underwear for brand names such as Calvin Klein and Ralph Lauren.

Century's joint venture with Delta, in the Irbid industrial estate, 80km from Amman, is now the largest garment manufacturing facility in Jordan. Century's nine other factories in Irbid employ more than 2,000 people.

"We do all the recruiting, take care of the local infrastructure, sort out the logistics," says Salah. Despite high expectations on both sides, the peace treaty between the two countries has not produced many joint ventures. There is no free trade agreement between Jordan and Israel, and only £15 million worth of trade annually between the two countries.

Salah says that co-operation makes good economic sense and

claims that Century has created more jobs than any other business in Jordan, where the official unemployment rate is 16 per cent — but which, according to analysts, is actually closer to 25 per cent. "People think the joint ventures are exploiting Jordanians, but if you ask the hundreds of people that we provide jobs for, they say 'we're very happy to be working'. There's a lot of hypocrisy about this issue," says Salah.

In July 1995 Century went public. Large shareholders include the Arab Banking Corporation and the Jordan National Bank. The value of the company's shares on the Jordan stock market has doubled over the past year, and Salah plans to float Century on the London Stock Exchange later this year.

No wonder Salah is so enthusiastic about business potential in the region. "A lot of people will build a television factory and then say 'let's sell to Sony'. I want to go to directly to Sony and have them build their factories in Jordan."

Investors are attracted to Jordan by the low cost of workers — unskilled workers earn £90 a month. Foreign companies are also exempted from paying corporation tax in Jordan.

But the real pull for foreign companies is a new free trade agreement — Irbid was designated the first qualified industrial zone by the US last year, giving it free trade access to US markets. Salah is keen to sign such an agreement with the European Union.

"The irony is, Jordan, Palestine and Israel all have free trade agreements with the EU. But mix them together and they immediately forfeit the right to enter the European Union. I've appealed to Blair, Major, Kohl. They all say, 'yes, we've got to fix this'. Well, fix it," says Salah emphatically.

There is a catch. The US stipulates that, to qualify for the benefits of qualified industrial zone status, 11 per cent of the materials used must come from Israel. If raw materials are used from both Jordan and Israel, they must each provide 20 per cent. This clause angered many Jordanians. The Israeli unions have also complained, saying that cheap Jordanian wages are taking away their jobs.

Salah, with the fervour of the converted, hopes that more Jordanians and Israelis will come round to his way of thinking.

"I've had a fantastic enlightening experience, where I've found that Israelis and Arabs can really get along. And everyone knows that the fastest way to get to peace is through economic co-operation."

DINA SHILOH

Mobile phone entrepreneur sets out his latest pitch

Chris Ayres traces the rapid rise of a retail millionaire whose new goal is a soccer club

Joe Pesci had been born in Croydon, he might have turned out something like Simon Jordan. The 31-year-old mobile phone tycoon and aspiring football club financier certainly seems to have learnt much of his negotiating tactics from the American actor's mobster movies. In mid-conversation, you almost expect him to vault his desk, grab you by the collar, and whisper: "Do you think I'm a funny guy, huh?"

When The Times meets Jordan, he is standing in the centre of his tennis court-sized office — arms outstretched, upper-lip curled — explaining why he has issued a High Court writ against Ulrika Jonsson. Jordan's relationship with the blonde sex symbol began when he paid her about £60,000 to promote his successful company, The PocketPhone Shop, for 18 months.

Their relationship became strained when Jordan rebuked the television star for turning up late to a shop opening. It's easy to imagine that Jonsson did not appreciate being treated like a gormless 18-year-old shop assistant, but Jordan insists that this was not the reason for their spat.

The real cause remains unclear, but Jordan claims that Jonsson has a further £105,000 worth of work to do. Jonsson, unsurprisingly, argues otherwise. "I'm going to get that money," Jordan fumes. "I don't care if I have to pay more than £105,000 in court fees to get it. I'm going to get it."

Everything about Jordan tells you that he is a man who has made a big pile of cash very quickly indeed. He wears the kind of outfits — Top Man meets Armani — that you could easily imagine a Premiership footballer buying for his weekend trip to Stringfellow. To complete the image, he smokes the occasional cigar and drives a silver Ferrari 550 to the office. Needless to say, it looks suitably out of place parked outside The PocketPhone Shop's headquarters in a concrete business park in Slough.

Simon Jordan has turned a £30,000 investment into a company worth an estimated £65 million in just four years

"I suppose you've got to be careful about the signs you're giving out," Jordan says, referring to the £140,000 car (which he says was a "bonus payment" from The PocketPhone Shop). "But what's wrong with being very successful, and having all the trappings of it?" At least Jordan seems to spread his cash around: his personal assistant has a bright red BMW coupe, and the company's staff car park is jammed with other similarly ostentatious examples from the German car industry.

Yet Jordan's arrogance is partly justified. In just four years he has turned a £30,000 investment into a company worth an estimated £65 million. The son of a Daily Mail print worker, Jordan went into business after deciding against becoming a professional footballer at the age of 16 (he signed youth forms with both Crystal Palace and Chelsea). After completing a degree in Computer Sciences, he went to work in the City for Dun & Bradstreet, the credit information group. At the age of 21 he decided to go it alone and set up his own mobile phone company.

After two years the business collapsed so Jordan moved to New York to start again. He became homesick and flew back to London to work for The Carphone Warehouse, an experience that ultimately inspired him to set up his own chain of mobile phone shops, based on the same idea of offering customers handsets from all four of Britain's mobile phone operators. Jordan says his entrepreneurial ability comes from a passion for sport, and he views business very much as a game that you either win or lose.

Yet the PocketPhone Shop was not entirely Jordan's own creation. In fact, he launched the business in 1994 with the help of Andrew Briggs, a colleague and former estate agent. They opened their first shop in Slough, with the company's headquarters migrating from a small room behind the counter to the building upstairs, then to a 13,000 sq ft business park around the corner.

The PocketPhone Shop now has more than 120 outlets throughout Britain, employing more than 650 staff, and is currently in talks to buy a chain of 22 shops in Australia. Jordan is also planning to move the head office again, this time to a 41,000 sq ft office block, also in Slough.

Jordan is clearly an inspiring boss, but he also appears to have created a culture of fear within The PocketPhone Shop. He has just spent £250,000 hiring a team of "mystery shoppers" to assess customer service in every outlet, and he admits that some of their reports resulted in "disciplinary proceedings". He is spending a further £250,000 installing two-way cameras in all his shops' computer terminals, so he can look in on staff at any time of day from the comfort of his Slough office. "The staff will definitely not like it," he says with relish, giving the impression that the investment is all part of some schoolboy prank.

Like most entrepreneurs, Jordan says he finds it hard to relax outside work. He has even fitted his car and his six-bedroom home in Cookham with an elaborate computer system that tells him exactly how many mobile phones are being sold by The PocketPhone Shop at any moment in time — and exactly which employees in which stores are responsible for the sales. Presumably, the technology will also eventually allow him to watch them.

He says he avoids socialising with other mobile phone industry big-wigs (he appears to have a particular dislike for Charles Dunstone, founder of The Carphone Warehouse), and instead spends his spare time with his girlfriend. However, he clearly enjoys throwing parties, and proudly reveals that he recently entertained Mike Reid (aka Frank Butcher from EastEnders).

At the moment Jordan's only sizeable business interest aside from The PocketPhone Shop is Crystal Palace, his beloved football club, which is facing financial collapse. Jordan says he is negotiating a £750,000 three-year shirt sponsorship deal with the club, and is interested in buying a stake of up to 25 per cent. But he is aware that his involvement with the troubled club, which recently went into administration, could ruin his image in the City, potentially harming a flotation of The PocketPhone Shop. "I'm a big fan of Palace, but I'm not stupid," he says. "I'm not putting my directorship in jeopardy."

Meanwhile, Jordan also has plans to overhaul The PocketPhone Shop's share structure. He admits that he is interested in buying Briggs's 50 per cent stake in the company for about £30 million, with the ultimate intention of floating the business within two years. "A business has one leader," Jordan says, without blinking. "I decided some years ago that that would be me. Andrew wants to go off and pursue other areas."

Jordan insists that the parting of ways is amicable. As if to prove it, he has decorated his office wall with an enormous photograph of himself with his arm around Briggs, taken at one of the company's summer balls. Both men are wearing dinner jackets, clutching champagne glasses and beaming. Jordan, however, looks by far the happier of the two.

New system sees car sales march ahead

Worried manufacturers perked up by T-reg tonic, says Arthur Leathley

CAR manufacturers yesterday declared T to be a success as they celebrated better than expected sales growth last month on the back of the first stage in the twice-yearly plate change.

March sales soared by more than 70 per cent on last year as customers reacted to heavy discounts on some T-registration models.

The unexpectedly high sales figures saved the motor industry from a catastrophic first quarter after the huge slump in orders during January and February. The 370,000 new registrations ensured a first-quarter increase of 2 per cent, after sales had slipped by more than a quarter in the opening two months.

Although the new figures brought relief to an industry braced for a fall in sales over the year, there was little cheer for troubled Rover, which again saw its market share dip.

Rover has consistently seen its share slip since the end of last year, and last month's figures showed a drop from 10 per cent to 7 per cent, leaving it well behind market leaders Ford and Vauxhall and also trailing Peugeot once again.

British manufacturers suffered a fall in market penetration as imports continued to grow, especially from Eastern Europe and the Far East.

The rise in car sales surprised industry leaders, who expected September to be by far the strongest month for orders under the new six-monthly plate changes.

Some had feared that companies and private buyers would delay placing orders until after last month's Budget. Although the Budget contained heavier taxes on company cars and fuel, manufacturers do not expect the measures to harm sales.

Senior industry figures admit, however, that they do not know whether September will also show a bigger increase than originally forecast, or whether the March increase will be at the expense of orders at the next plate change.

Despite the overall rise in sales over the first quarter, manufacturers are not altering their overall forecasts of a 9 per cent fall in annual sales, to two million.

Roger King, acting chief executive of the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders, said: "The new plates have clearly been a big hit with customers and we are pleased to see that the switch to a twice-yearly system is going so well."

The March boom helped sales for the first three months of the year to total 622,562, a 21 per cent increase on the first quarter of 1998.

Ford celebrated the arrival of its award-winning Focus as Britain's top-selling car. The Focus, launched last October as a replacement for the popular Escort, beat off the challenge of Ford's own Fiesta to top the March 1999 sales charts.

The March 1999 top ten sellers were: 1 Ford Focus, 2 Ford Fiesta, 3 Vauxhall Astra, 4 Vauxhall Corsa, 5 Vauxhall Vectra, 6 Renault Megane, 7 Renault Clio, 8 Volkswagen Golf, 9 Ford Mondeo, 10 Peugeot 206.

In the can

THE mighty Coca-Cola Corporation faces an unaccustomed defeat in Paris today and a court ruling that will end its long attempt to buy Orangina, the French soft drink with the distinctive pear-shaped bottle.

Coke first tried to buy the soft drinks business from Pernod Ricard at the end of 1987 for £520 million, but the deal was stopped by the French Finance Ministry last autumn after complaints from Pepsi. Coke appealed to the Conseil d'Etat, France's highest court, which will rule today.

Everyone expects the Americans to lose and Dominique Strauss-Kahn, France's Finance Minister — "looking a bit tired these days," says my informant unkindly — to emerge victorious. Coke will have to walk away. This being France, defeats for the Government in the Conseil are as rare as ministers without mistresses.

MOST former Tory Cabinet ministers are festooned with non-executive directorships by now, but one has only just succumbed to his first. Sir George Young, known for his fondness for bicycling everywhere — "in London only," he adds — and his dislike of smoking, is joining the sheltered housebuilder McCarthy & Stone.

"They approached me directly," he tells me. "I haven't been looking for any directorships — this is the only one, and I only took it on because I've always been interested in housing." He was, after all, Housing Minister for almost four years.

Forest player

JEAN-CHRISTOPHE Novelli has persuaded his countryman David Ginola, the Spurs footballer, to help to launch his latest acquisition, Gordaleton Mill, a country house hotel in the New Forest. This is something of a return to Novelli's roots because he earned his first Michelin star at the hotel's restaurant six years ago. The French chef, whose six restaurants now turn over more than £6.5 million a year, is thought to have paid considerably less than the £1.5 million asking price for Gordaleton. Novelli has also just been named one of the UK's "50 most alluring men", he tells me smugly, adding that Ginola failed to make the list.

On points

GEOFFREY DICKS, economics analyst at Greenwich NatWest, included a plaintive memo to Mervyn King at the Bank of England in his latest forecast, published before yesterday's base rate cut.

He admitted that, month by month, he has had a bad run of form in predicting the Monetary Policy Committee's decisions.

"This run predates the loss of form of a certain football team that we both support," he says sadly. "The message is clear: if we wish to salvage something from the rest of the season, I have got to start calling the MPC right." Good news for Aston Villa, the object of both men's affections, because Dicks had tentatively suggested a quarter-point cut before yesterday.

I ring to congratulate him, and get his colleague, John O'Sullivan. "Villa isn't mentioned around here any more," he says with a hint of satisfaction. "Earlier in the season you never heard an end to it, but it's all gone very quiet of late."

OVER at Financial Times Information they have abolished history. From April 1 the various FTSE constituents were reorganised. As a result, a colleague has just discovered, it is impossible to call up on screen any of their past performances. The FT people are unrepentant. "We always knew that in the month of April there would be no history," one tells me cheerfully. "The data will be available at the end of this month." Still, I get the impression they would rather no one had noticed.

Paint it black

DIRECT advertises itself as Europe's leading direct marketing magazine and distributes a stylishly black media pack. Executives are encouraged to staple their business cards, also modishly black, to the front cover before they distribute the packs.

As you can see, the effect is not always as intended.

Prim, proper and a bit of a weed

When Claudius and his courtiers enter the Young Vic for the version of The Mousetrap that Agatha Christie did not write, they are greeted by an odd sight. It is Paul Rhys's Hamlet posed with arms outstretched beside a tree, a brown wig and a crown of thorns on his head. Is he playing mad? Is the director, Laurence Boswell, signalling to us that the play occurs in a Christian context, and that the prince must die to cure rotten Denmark? Or is it, as I felt, an inadvertent indication of the limitations of Rhys, who more than once put me in mind of the gentle Jesus, meek and mild, of Charles Wesley's sentimental hymn.

Boswell's four-hour production occurs on and between two small black stages linked by a retractable black causeway. It is a setting that invites fluency and simplicity, and on the whole that is what the flanking spectators get. Don't ask me why the "seafaring men" who deliver Hamlet's missive resemble members of Sinsin's fresh from hijacking a nuclear sub, or why Rhys orates about destiny while scrubbing his nails and Yorick's skull inside a hot sunken bath, or why the players look as if they are auditioning for the tramps in Waiting for Godot, or why at the end Chinese-style model warriors line the causeway. Just try to believe me when I say that, considering it mixes guns and swords, medieval robes and modern trousers, this is not a notably tricky revival.

But is it a particularly good one? There I cannot be so sure. Rhys is undeniably one of our finest young actors, but he is tackling a part that relentlessly exposes any holes in a performer's range. Where is Hamlet's fire and frenzy? Or the pride, vindictiveness and ambition of which he accuses himself, or the soldier's eye and sword that impress Ophelia, or the evidence for Fortinbras's claim that he would have proved most royal, or the scathing humour that some modern actors have found in the character? Nowhere much. Well, there is no such being as a complete Hamlet. Some may find Rhys's interpretation — a bereft but inadequate son who actually uses his last moments to cradle the mother who has followed his adored father to purgatory — more than adequate. He quivers and throbs with sensitive intelligence and fastidious feeling. But his more robust moments, as when he grapples on the ground with Ophelia, seem forced. There is a hint of primness in his manner as well as of Michael Howard in his vowels. To be blunt, I thought him a bit monotonous. As Ophelia, Megan Dodds is too cool, too unfazed by Hamlet's rejection, for her falling apart to be wholly credible; but I suppose she could argue that the death of Robin Soans's punctilious but fond Polonius has helped to motivate her. Meanwhile, Suzanne Bertish does a nice, subtle job of suggesting Gertrude's growing alienation from Donald Sumpter's Claudius, as does Sumpter of showing his alienation from health, happiness and himself. But I suspect the performance that will stick in my mind is one that defiantly contradicts Tom Stoppard's sympathetic view of the attendant lords. Was there ever such an ambitious creep as Leo Wringer's bowing and sometimes prostrate Rosencrantz? Beside him, Malvollio might be a rebellious teenager.

ed in nicely observed and sometimes comic detail, also rings true. A suitably harrowed-looking Suzanne Burden, all searching eyes, nibbling teeth and fidgeting fingers, is excellent as Monica. Battling to retain her composure or simply too shocked for anger, she is tautly focused throughout.

But for all this, I remained unmoved. The script — and particularly in the second half, set during the trial in France — fails to hang together. The problem lies mostly with the character of Monica's partner Mike, Harris never quite knows what to do with him, and neither does Mark Hadfield. He starts off compassionate; by the end, after witnessing the trial, he is hellbent on self-mutilation and almost incoherent with rage. This he directs at Monica, unable to countenance her apparent equilibrium.

You can see where Harris is going: she is trying to suggest that hearing such harrowing things breeds an irrational resentment of those who remain less soiled, and heaps heartache on tragedy by destroying one's closest relationships. But the transformation fails to make sense. So, too, with the macabre ending, which abruptly hits quite a false note of catharsis. Elsewhere Harris plausibly suggests that people in extreme circumstances react in quite unexpected ways; here her script tries too hard to invert normality, and ends up seeming merely bizarre.

Murder on the magic floor

Roberto Zucco
 Barbican Pit

Despite exposure to the crushing banality of two previous plays by Bernard-Marie Koltès, I set off with some enthusiasm for this one, since many reports on its British premiere at Stratford praised the quality of his writing, and all admired the mysteriously light-sensitive floor of Jeremy Herbert's set and James Macdonald's cool, precise direction.

Koltès was inspired to write the play, in his last months before dying of an AIDS-related illness in 1989, after seeing four photos of a handsome young killer on a wanted poster. They seemed to be pictures of four different men, and this became the germ of his hero's chameleon-like adoption of roles and, of course, the unknowability at his inmost heart. After killing his father, he escapes from jail, strangles his mother, then stabs an inspector and shoots a teenage boy; he gives the boy's bored mother an experience to remember: he seduces a young girl and, because he is a character in a French play, his speech is either curt or madly rhapsodic. Asked what is on his mind after a fight, he replies: "I'm dreaming about the immortality of the crab, the slug, and the dung-beetle."

Like Genet, and to some extent like Gide, Koltès adores the handsome killer he creates and appears to want him to be seen as a man who, unburdened by conscience, performs the dreadful deeds the rest of us dare not do. To establish his heroic status Zucco moves through a society where almost everyone else is a hypocrite, a sadist or gorging at the materialistic trough. In the riveting scene in the park where Zucco takes a woman hostage and holds a gun at her son's head, onlookers gather and discuss the situation as though it were a play. More typical are the scenes where one character delivers a lengthy speech to another who remains silent and un-moving. This certainly contributes to the play's weird artificiality, counterpointing a crisp translation by Martin Crimp that caroms from street argot to metaphysics. Zucco, who remains a cipher, is given the requisite alienated air by Zubin Varla, moving through space as if conscious of every floating atom in it.

The acting by three of the women, Mairéad McKinley, Cathryn Bradshaw and Diana Kent, is particularly vivid, and the floor that retains for a while the shadows of bodies that have fallen upon it is fascinating. But the play itself strikes me as disagreeable and dishonest.

JEREMY KINGSTON

The keys to the political asylum

The Colonel Bird
 Gate, W11

A play set on the Serbian border where Nato planes fly overhead on bombing missions cannot be faulted for being out of date. Jeremy Kingston writes. It so happens that the targets lie in Bosnia, but since Balkan history always alternates between despotism and slaughter, it is no surprise to learn that the play is supposed to be set in the year 2000. This year Kosovo, next year Macedonia: death's carousel sometimes whirls faster but never stops going round.

Hristo Boychev is from Bulgaria, a country currently at peace, and though the war next door impinges on his characters, its battles remain offstage. Most of the play is set in the ruins of a monastery, cut off by snowdrifts and wolves at the far end of a gorge, where half a dozen mental patients live a degraded life until a disorientated UN plane deluges them with aid parcels. "The Balkans are all the same to them," one of the inmates shrewdly points out. "They were told to drop aid on the Balkans, so that's what they've done."

Combat uniforms and sky-blue berets are included in the aid, and these transform the most traumatised patient (Damian Myerscough) into a UN colonel, who in turn transforms the others into a disciplined and purposeful group, though all of them continue to be mad. Eventually the group applies to join Nato as an independent force, attaching their application to the leg of a migrating bird and scanning the winter skies for an answer.

With Nato seen as an all-providing god, what we have here is plainly an allegory for Eastern Europe's longing to join the banquet. Boychev is not concerned to examine the nature of madness — the Gate's current season is called The Idiots — except insofar as a wish to join the West might be a disturbing symptom. So the disorganised mad behaviour at the start is something of a trial to watch.

Once the madness is canalised into Lilliputian ambition, Rupert Goold's direction creates an impressive coherence. The bird-catching scenes are exciting, with the characters huddling together and leaning back in unison when the flocks pass above them. Adam Cork's fast, jangling music also gives a fine sense of adrenalin pounding through the system, and though the characters are seldom more than two-dimensional, the performances are vigorous, while the closing scene, in Strasbourg's cathedral square, packs a hearty satiric punch.

The tunesmith who made dodgers artful

In the unlikely event of a mobile phone company offering me a "one to one" with a late lamented idol, I think I would call Lionel Bart. Unambitious, I know, compared to Mr Chris Evans's desire for transcendental discourse with John Lennon (what a meeting of minds that would be), but I have my reasons. In my mercifully brief career as a jobbing pianist I found myself almost permanently accompanying school productions of Bart's masterpiece, Oliver!. As a result I can still perform almost the entire score from memory. You don't get that from Alfred Brendel.

Anyway, during one of those interminable school shows — with the fragrance of cabbage wafting alluringly over the deputy headmistress's improbable impersonation of a Victorian tart — I leant over to the flautist (a grizzled veteran of those £20-per-week pit bands) and said: "At least Lionel Bart is making a packet out of this." Whereupon he fixed me with a look as forlorn as his trills. "Poor bugger doesn't make a penny out of Oliver!" he hissed. "But then, he didn't write a note of it."

This Delphic whisper, scarcely audible under the cries of "Fagin, you avaricious old skeleton!" coming from the overexcited gym master chewing the scenery, intrigued me. I found out that the flautist spoke nothing less than the literal truth. Bart had indeed naively sold the priceless rights to his magnum opus for just £15,000 — after being ruined by booze, LSD, the ghastly flop of Twang!, a pilfering platoon of gay pick-ups, and a short-lived but exceedingly tolerable stab at a lifestyle that made the Aga Khan look dowdy. Well, that's showbiz.

And he really didn't write a note of Oliver!. He couldn't write music at all. He composed by humming natty tunes to fit his snappy lyrics. The son of a Jewish tailor, he was the closest thing to Irving Berlin that Britain ever produced. But the tedious matter of supplying notation, harmony and orchestration he happily left to postdoctoral graduates grateful for pitances.

These snippets of Bart-lore fascinated me. How did he rise from East End obscurity to massive esteem, launching Cliff Richard and Tommy Steele with his whistle-some ditties, conceiving the most enduring British musical between The Mikado and Cats, dating Judy Garland, schmoozing with Princess Margaret? And why did he then fall so fast and so far?

Much later I met Bart. By then he was living over a shop in Acton. His finances were broken, but not his Cockney-lad optimism. He was, as they say in the East End, forever blowing bubbles. He had "200 new songs stashed away", he had musicals practically ready for the West End on subjects ranging from Golda Meir to Quasimodo. I was consumed with embarrassment in the face of what I pompously assumed to be rank self-delusion, and never wrote up the interview. If Bart wondered why not, he never phoned to ask. And last Saturday he died of cancer. So now I must enter the realms of hypothetical one-to-ones across the footlights in the theatre of mortality. What would I ask Bart if he were still here? The traits that first fascinated me about him no longer seem so peculiar. After all, pop music is full of people who can't notate their own tunes. And Bart wasn't the first showbiz celebrity to take the Hogarthian road from rags to riches to ruin, nor the last. The very bravado that makes for a successful theatre creature often leads inexorably towards nemesis.

No, what I would like to know, but now never will, is whether the theory I evolved about Oliver! while sitting through all those school shows has any basis in fact. It is that the musical has little to do with Oliver Twist as Dickens wrote it, and everything to do with the East End of Bart's heyday — a weirdly amoral place of seedy glamour in which the Krays were romanticised as modern-day Dick Turpins, and thrill-seeking showbiz swingers tripped the light fantastic down the Mile End Road to party with gangland barons.

My contention is that Bart pulled off an insouciant piece of literary subversion. After all, Dickens intended Twist to be a brutally moralistic tale of real life on the "cold, wet, shelterless, midnight streets" of 1830s London. He wanted to show criminals "in all their deformity". His outrage leaps from every page, even today. He consigned Fagin to the most terrifying death-cell scene in literature. His Sikes is a murderous psychopath who bludgeons his prostitute lover to death. His Beadle is a grotesque sadist.

Most of this Bart dumped, instead he recast Dickens in an East End populated by cheeky urchins, loveable rogues and tarts with hearts — just as Frank Loesser had immortalised the equally unlikely "honourable hoodlums" of Damon Runyan's New York ten years earlier in Guy and Dolls.

Bart lived to recognise the irony of what he had done by sanitising Dickens. In 1994, shortly before Cameron Mackintosh triumphantly revived Oliver! at the Palladium (and, to his eternal credit, voluntarily paid Bart the royalties that the composer had signed away 25 years earlier), Bart gave an almost apologetic interview. "In 1960," he claimed, "homeless people in the streets were fiction, straight out of Dickens. Now they are real again."

He certainly wasn't the century's sharpest social commentator, nor its most profound tunesmith. But he did create something that will live as long as people have voices to sing. And I know that I will possess to my dying day the peculiarly useless ability to play the score of Oliver! from memory. How Bart might have laughed at that, had I plucked up the nerve to tell him.

Kyle Eastwood leading his quintet at Pizza Express: it was the biopic of Charlie Parker directed by his father that lured him away from movies into jazz

Bird who flew Clint's nest

Having grown up in a house full of his father Clint's jazz records, Kyle Eastwood might reasonably have been expected to have developed an interest in the music. But it wasn't until his celebrated parent made Bird — a film biography of Charlie Parker — that Kyle, impressed like many before him by the dramatic life of the great alto virtuoso, decided to make his living playing jazz. Instead of following his father into film.

Listeners to Kyle Eastwood's debut album, From There to Here, with its stellar cast ranging from Joni Mitchell and Julia Fordham to jazz luminaries Mark Isham and Peter Erskine — not to mention arranger Vince Mendoza — might be forgiven for reserving judgment concerning the strictly jazz-based credentials of Eastwood's filis. Certainly, anyone who heard the music alone — which ranges from material by Marvin Gaye and Tom Waits to originals by Eastwood's then pianist Matt McGuire, much of it performed by a big band — would never pick out the bassist as the leader, competent as his contributions are throughout.

JAZZ
Kyle Eastwood
Pizza Express, W1

The band under Eastwood's name currently touring Europe, however, is another matter. The music played by tenor player Eric Alexander, trumpeter Jim Rotondi, pianist Jon Regen and drummer Yoron Israel alongside Eastwood is homogeneous (a pretty straightforward take on the hard bop forever associated with Blue Note recordings of the 1950s and 1960s) and unadorned by soulful guest vocals. Even their versions of the McGuire compositions featured on the album sounded altogether snappier than their recorded manifestations, and their second-set nod to Thelonious Monk — a lively visit to We See — nailed their colours firmly to the mast.

Beginning with two McGuire tunes, Watch, Watch and Enter Evening, the quintet clearly looked to Rotondi and Alexander, who have been playing and recording together since the early 1990s, to spearhead their sound, rather than being propelled — as bass-led bands such as Dave Holland's are — by Eastwood. The leader did prove, though, in taking the night's first solo, that he can plot a surefooted course through a chord sequence, and that he has a pleasingly full-bodied, earnest sound that will benefit greatly from the increased technical assurance inevitably resulting from his current live exposure in such sympathetic company.

The highlights of the evening's music were to be found mainly in passages of interplay between the deliciously tight drumming of Israel and the sly, discursive piano of Regen, but when Alexander built up a head of steam — as he did in the second set's opener, an Eastwood/McGuire composition titled Da Da Ba Ba Nu Nu — he demonstrated not only the big sound associated with Chicago tenors, but also a nimbleness that contrasted tellingly with Rotondi's more forthright trumpet contributions. If Eastwood's name attracts attention it is hearnening that the likes of Alexander and Rotondi should benefit.

Cause and effect

Spirited music-making in support of a good cause made this concert special. But then not all charity galas secure the services of Vladimir Ashkenazy, who was conducting in aid of the Everyman — Action Against Male Cancer appeal, and not all such events are the result of a happy end: this was the brainchild of the double-bass player Tom Croxon, here, with his Philharmonia Orchestra colleagues celebrating a victory over testicular cancer.

Optimism rules at least the beginning of Candide, and Bernstein's overture got the concert off to a cracking start.

Philharmonia/Ashkenazy
Festival Hall

Ashkenazy shared a crisp account, full of swagger, and the winds and percussion provided a brightness that contrasted very effectively with the warmth of the strings.

Gershwin's Piano Concerto in F is another New York composer's portrait of home. The work pulses with big-city energy, and here it received a big-hearted performance. Ashkenazy was alert and communicative, more than simply an accompanist in the ongoing dialogue between piano and orchestra. Few pianists have more feeling for the idiom than Peter Jablonski, who brought just the right blend of cheekiness and pathos to his part. The Andante was memorable for Mark David's laid-back, bluesy trumpet solos, and the finale was appropriately frantic without ever turning brash.

Similarly, Ashkenazy emphasised the lyrical beauty of Rimsky-Korsakov's Scheherazade. He drew a performance rich in instrumental detail, and the woodwind solos were outstandingly played. The first movement had broad sweep, and the third poetic languor: real excitement was saved for the close, driven vigorously but never pushed too hard.

Young, gifted and inadequately funded

With The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe to the left and the National Youth Orchestra to the right, there wasn't a flapjack to be had at the Barbican coffee points on Wednesday. This was a seriously under-age night: with the difference being that, in the Barbican Hall, the voracious flapjack guzzlers turned out to be the ones on stage.

One hundred and fifty-two of them, no less. A year ago, they were corporately 50 years old: on Wednesday night the youngest were a pair of 14-year-old twins from Malvern, and the eldest a 19-year-old cellist from Edinburgh. It could have been any one of London's finest orchestras on a really good night. On the basis that the young do today what the hoary old professionals do tomorrow, the NYO unwittingly provided a splendid curtain-raiser to the Barbican's forthcoming festival, St Petersburg: Romance and Revolution in a programme of three composers associated with the city.

Flawed Finnish myth

If the Kullervo Symphony were by anyone other than Sibelius it would probably never be heard at all. It's long, it's expensive to perform and it's badly written. The regular anticipations of stylistic features associated with the mature composer and the rather less frequent inspirations in narrative or characterisation do not compensate for the generally undistinguished material of the work and its clumsy construction.

Even so, there was every reason to hope that Sakari Oramo, who is as ardent a champion of Sibelius as any other Finnish conductor, and the City of Birmingham Symphony Orchestra, which has become thoroughly familiar with Sibelius in the recent past, would make a persuasive case for Kullervo. In fact, after holding the structure precariously together through the four first movements, the conductor did succeed in getting the final sec-

CONCERTS
NYO/Otaka
Barbican

First came Liadov, protégé of Mussorgsky and, by all accounts, a lazy man. He knew the things he liked, though, and his own little tableau The Enchanted Lake, intended for an opera he never got round to, was one of them. It was a brave way to start a concert, with the barely corporeal tremolos of the strings and the veiled breathing of the woodwind inevitably having to hold their own above the clatter of programmes being noisily consulted and dropped (by the adults). The players' concentration was intense, their focus absolute.

Tadaaki Otaka, conducting, encouraged them to flex their muscle in Rachmaninov's Symphony No 3, written in exile from the St Petersburg of his student days, and surging with aching songs of a long-remembered homeland. Otaka milked the ardent responses of these young players, from the first bright flare of an upbeat, to the plangent Slavic song of the woodwind choir, and oo to the great final Dies Irae to which the entire symphony's language and expression seem to lead — at least in a performance as tautly paced as this one.

The tour de force of another remarkable NYO evening was Mussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition. In Ravel's high-gloss orchestration the work becomes a veritable concerto for orchestra, and Otaka ensured that there was time and space enough to reveal the intensive work done during the orchestra's Easter course by Peter Stark who prepared the programme, and by all the section coaches. The result was a thrillingly virtuosic performance by an orchestra which receives less than 2 per cent of its annual income from the State. Something wrong, surely?

HILARY FINCH

CBSO/Oramo
Birmingham

don, Kullervo's death, to fall into place as though it belongs there. There was some long-term satisfaction in that. There was some emotional interest in the solo performances of Lilli Paasikivi, who was particularly effective in lamenting the fate of the hero's unfortunate sister, and Heikki Kipela, who was suitably sulen as Kullervo himself. The male voices of the CBSO Chorus, though not entirely at ease with their lines from the Kalevala, were energetic in moving the story along.

One of the problems with the presentation of that early score in Symphony Hall on this occasion, however, was the decision to open the concert with a masterful work from the other end of Sibel-ius's career. Drawing on the same mythic background, though in a more generalised way, Tapiola is as economic as Kullervo is extravagant and, in less than a quarter of the time, four times as dramatic. Nothing is overstated and not one expressive gesture or nuance of colour in the orchestration is wasted.

It took a little time for Oramo and the CBSO to establish the atmosphere at the beginning of Tapiola but, once that was achieved, they set a standard in poetic inspiration that, for all the professional commitment deployed after the interval, they simply could not emulate in Kullervo. When the orchestration does not work, and when there is so much that is tediously overdrawn and embarrassingly overemphatic, there is a limit to what even the most devoted performers can achieve.

Progressive rock, despised at home, is coining it all over Europe. Paul Sexton reports

Like Liberal Democrats on the margins of British music, Porcupine Tree are fighting to win the majority over to the principles of PR. Not proportional representation, but that great misunderstood beast called progressive rock. A phrase that was coined as a compliment in a dreamy age of Roger Dean doodles and ELP posters on 10,000 beddit walls, has now become so pejorative that when Mansun's second album Six turned out to be ditty-free, their detractors gleefully hissed "prog-rock" at them. It was the verbal equivalent of chucking rotting vegetables during their guitar solos.

But beyond the cynical gaze of the fashion constabulary, Porcupine Tree have spent almost the entire decade becoming a secret British success story in European countries where you can utter the dreaded phrase without fear of deportation. Almost unknown at home, the quartet regularly play sell-out tours of Europe to four-figure-capacity venues, nurturing a fan base that many of their countrymen would love to hack into.

Created as a bedroom experiment by chief composer and vocalist Steven Wilson as a teenager in the late 1980s, Porcupine Tree gradually evolved into a real live band, with recruits including former Japan keyboard player Richard Barbieri. Along the way, they have sold 100,000 albums, while people back home simply ignored them. The release of their fifth album, Stupid Dream, is being marked with a set of British dates, but they are booked by much bigger shows in such homes-from-home as Rome, Athens and Warsaw. Wilson believes that our European partners could teach us a thing or two about musical laissez-faire. As Porcupine Tree prepared to play a second night for an attentive and socially diverse audience at the 2,000-capacity Palaeus in Rome recently, Wilson said: "Somehow we've become labelled a progressive rock band, but you see the audience tonight, they're not people who listen to progressive rock. They're just people who like good songs and experimental production."

The key to such European harmony lies simply in a little publicity. A Rome station, Radio Rock, got hold of an earlier Porcupine Tree album and has played them into the ground ever since. "We'd only been playing as a band for six months," Wilson recalls, "and we got booked to play a show in Rome. At the time, we were playing gigs in London to 100 people. We turned up in Italy, walked on and realised we'd sold out this 1,200-seater."

No such luck back home, where most album rock is caught in mainstream radio's exclusion zone. "Generally speaking, in Britain they don't play your stuff unless it's a single," Wilson says. "It's not a rock station, but it just seems to be My Religion and Alanis Morissette every five minutes." Wilson says.

It is a problem shared by another, uncelebrated British rock export, Delirious?, who have had even bigger sales abroad and recently achieved their third British Top 20 single, See the Stars, but continue to be cold-shouldered here by television and radio.

tur sends a message roughly as welcoming as a cross on the door of a medieval plague house. "It has become a paradox," says Wilson. "To use the word 'progressive' actually means 'regressive'. If you look at the dictionary definition — moving forward, doing something new, whatever it says — I think we're all of those things, but unfortunately I know that 99 per cent of the times that the word is used, it's meant in the sense of 'sounds like Genesis, sounds like Marillion'."

Stupid Dream may occasionally summon the spirit of Meddle, may even be charged with the occasional Nursery Cryme, but is in essence an evocative sonic sun shower, largely free of the tendency towards portentous twaddle of its supposed forebears. Obligated to operate as a secret society, experimental rock tends to appeal to a certain stereotype, as Wilson admits.

"The people we get through to in England tend to be the more obsessive males. We come here to Rome and we get teenage girls. It's a different vibe."

If only radio programmers bothered to open the box, they would find that Stupid Dream contains some enjoyable finger-food as part of the full menu, such as the elegantly harmonised Stranger by the Minute and Piano Lessons. Therein lies the fun, says Barbieri.

"If you can put experimentation into a pop song, like the Byrds or the Beach Boys did, for me that's the most interesting thing about music. It's what makes great albums," Wilson rounds off the point. "The modern equivalent would be the first Portishead album. An extraordinary sound, but still great pop songs. If you can fuse the two, that's a timeless record."

Stupid Dream is available on K-Scope Records/Snapper Music. Porcupine Tree play the Foundry, Birmingham, tonight; Pavilion, Brighton, tomorrow; Boardwalk, Sheffield (16); Cotter, Bristol (17); New Trinity, Bristol (18); Southampton University (24); and the Bloomsbury in London on May 10.

Mussolini with balls

CIRCUS

This century's greatest juggler, and parallels his life with that of Benito Mussolini. In fact it is a virtuoso display of ensemble and solo juggling conducted for the most part in an atmosphere of extreme minimalism.

There are occasional sallies into the world of entertainment, including a sprinkling of vaudeville pastiche. Members of the cast attempt to outdo each other with feats of skill and coordination, the high point of which finds one man balancing a club on his chin, a football on his ankle, another club on one finger, on the wrist of which hand a hoop is kept spinning while he juggles with the other hand. There are also episodes of exquisite grace in which the company dances arm-in-arm while maintaining a flow of balls with their spare hands. But for all the skill, much of this highly choreographed work is so perfect that it becomes somewhat too mesmerising for the non-afficionado.

The Great Basofal, alias Bob Pearce, is a saggy little man in a string vest and long grubby pants. His childlike mixture of confusion and curiosity is hardly surprising given that he exists in a world where ball-point pens and clipboards fall from the sky, and where a spacetrack can be conjured from a large linoleum square and a folded sheet.

His Hoxton show takes the form of a Heath Robinsonesque journey, complete with space travel and giant birds. Since Basofal spends much of his time stranded, either in the interstellar doldrums or shipwrecked by storm, it would be fair to see his journey in the larger sense, a vision of the soul's progress through a series of lives in which the mortal body is left behind and existence is guided by a clipboard-providing life form. What, then, is life like for the Great Basofal?

Having signed his official documents, Basofal sets out on a journey, tries to fry eggs, brings up a baby bird, throws bread around, encounters a space storm, faces up to his own mortality, grows old and climbs a ladder. It is not a particularly revolutionary view of existence, but then Basofal is not a revolutionary clown.

Perhaps it is churlish to expect a silent little man in ill-fitting trousers to provide transcendental insights into the nature of existence, but Basofal does seem to be more of a philosophical clown than a comic one, and at the very least should be able to persuade his audience to see the world as he does for a few minutes.

It is only when he gets a co-star, in the form of a papier-mâché skull, that things start to take off, and the skit in which the pair fight over the ownership of a bowler hat is probably the most successful of the whole show.

EMINEM
The Slim Shady LP
(Aftermath Ent)
Interscope 490 287 £15.99

IN AMERICA, where it has already sold a million copies, The Slim Shady LP has prompted howls of moral indignation, not just from the usual coalition of concerned parents and ambitious politicians, but from the heart of the liberal music establishment itself. In a strongly worded article, the editor of Billboard has declared the violently misogynous imagery of Eminem's lyrics and solemnly urged his readers not to purchase the album by the 24-year-old rapper otherwise known as Marshall Mathers, from Detroit.

The Slim Shady LP is certainly extreme. Guilt plays the roles of an armed robber, a rapist and a double murderer with mischievous and explicit gusto, is typical. In '97 Bonnie & Clyde an even darker narrative unfolds as the song's murderous central character whispers sweet nothings to his infant daughter while disposing of the dead body of her (pregnant) mother in a lake: "There goes Mama, splashing in the water/No more fighting with Dad, no more restraining order/No more step-Dada, no more new brother/Blow a kiss-a-bye-bye, tell Mama you love her."

But the celebration of human depravity in the popular arts is nothing new. Indeed, in cinema, theatre, television drama and literature the line between humour and horror has become hopelessly blurred and the tenderly observed depiction of grotesquely anti-social behaviour is now a staple theme. So why all the fuss when similarly outré subject-matter finds its way into popular music?

In the case of Eminem the answer is twofold. First, his music is so obviously and cynically pitched at children. With its classroom imagery and kids' humour, the (heavily edited)

ed) single, My Name Is, currently at No 2 in the British chart, is cleverly designed to appeal to a pre-teen market: "Hi kids, do you like violence? (Yeah!)/Wanna see me stick nine-inch nails through each one of my eyelids?"

But the key to most of the fuss is Eminem's skill as a communicator, which, coupled with his inspired sense of musical drama, makes listening to this album as compulsive and grimly entertaining as watching a Tarantino film. Like water, truly popular music seeps everywhere, and although the attitude informing this album is ideologically indefensible, it is nevertheless pop of an exceptionally high order and thus all the more subversive. We may have heard such things before, but this time it is going to prove well-nigh impossible to ignore.

In the number If I Had, Eminem sets out his manifesto with a characteristically blunt turn of phrase: "If I had one wish/I'd ask for a big enough ass for the whole world to kiss". Whatever the objections, the world may well end up having to do just that.

CATATONIA
Equally Cursed And Blessed
(Blanco Y Negro 398427094 £15.99)

AS THEY stand on the brink of success on a Robbie-esque scale, Catatonia have taken pains to ensure that this, their third album, does not come laden with too much baggage from the past. Only one song, a fast, minimalist, punk anthem called Storm the Palace, unequivocally recalls their indie-rock origins, while the epic Dazed, Beautiful and Bruised provides a suitably brash finale.

Otherwise, the album comprises a succession of songs such as Bulimic Beats, Nothing Hurts, She's a Millionaire and the current single, Dead from the Waist Down, in a more subdued, easy-listening vein. The best, by a long way, is Londonium, a number which provides a suitably bustling chorus while discreetly signalling the group's dislike of the capital: "London never sleeps, it just sucks/The life out of me".

THE KELTZ are basically a folk trio who improvise, using reels, jigs and ballads as bases for extended explorations of the rhythmic and harmonic possibilities in traditional Celtic

Paul Henderson's guitar and the various saxophones, whistles and flutes — not to mention bawzouki and bodhran — of Sean O'Rourke, all propelled by the subtly vigorous percussion of Vijay Kangukar. But, unlike the longer-established band, the Keltz have a rock-influenced side to their music.

Henderson plays guitar synth as well as delicate acoustic guitar, and the power and fluency of his solos on the instrument, as well as its light precision in accompanying roles, give an extra dimension to the trio's music. The Keltz may not appeal to diehard purists in either camp, but the less rigid aficionados of both jazz and folk should find a great deal to enjoy in this neat, airy album.

TERENCE BLANCHARD
Jazz in Film
(Sony Classical SK 60671)

BEGINNING with Alex North's theme for A Streetcar Named Desire and subsequently exploring scores ranging from Jerry Goldsmith's

Chinatown and André Previn's The Subterraneans to Duke Ellington's little-known Degas's Racing World, Terence Blanchard has certainly consolidated his reputation as a poised but fiery trumpeter with this, his first album for Sony Classical. He also draws elegant performances from his sidemen: saxophonists Joe Henderson and Donald Harrison, trombonist Steve Turre, and the late pianist Kenny Kirkland.

Out and out jazz fans, however, may find Blanchard's arrangements, particularly his use of strings, a little polite: his sextet visit to Anatomy of a Murder, for instance, has just enough Mingusian robustness to invite distinctly unflattering comparisons with the late bassist's music. Sony, though, has promised "pure improvised jazz albums" as well as such "bridges between formally composed music and jazz" from Blanchard in the future, so the move may yet bear more robust fruit than this recording, polished and undeniably pleasant as it is.

COMPILATION ALBUMS

DISCO music — mindless, repetitive and soulless, claimed the critics back in the 1970s. But with the release of a lavishly presented 80-track four-CD set, The Disco Box (Rhino 75595), you can argue that the critics got it wrong.

True, there were records which do not deserve to be resurrected — Disco Tex and the Sex-O-Lettes should have been left to boogie in peace — but others still retain vitality: Chic, for instance, with Le Freak and Good Times, the foghorn-voiced Shirley and Company on Shame, Shame, Shame, Candi Staton's Young Hearts Run Free and Rose Royce's infectious Car Wash. People may throw their hands up in horror at hearing Village People's YMCA again, but I bet it still packs a dancefloor.

In the decade before disco, teenagers were still dancing, but they were doing the Madison, the Watusi, the Stroll and a dozen or so other dances featured on The Land of 1000 Dances (Ace CDCHD702), a compilation of dance-craze hits. Supposedly ephemeral hits such as the Isley Brothers' Twist and Shout, Bob and Earl's Harlem Shuffle or The Locomotion by Little Eva have all stood the test of time.

One reason may be the skills of a group of songwriters who worked in New York's Brill Building in the late 1950s and early 1960s. On Broadway (Westside WESD216), a double-CD concentrates on three husband-and-wife songwriting teams who dominated the charts with a series of three-minute classics. Carole King and Gerry Goffin brought us the above-mentioned Locomotion as well as Up on the Roof and I'm into Something Good. Cynthia Weil and Barry Mann gave us On Broadway and We Gotta Get Out of This Place, while Jeff Barry and Ellie Greenwich supplied Da Doo Ron Ron and Be My Baby, most of which can be heard here.

Balkans war: as reporters describe their battle to get the news out, the media are criticised for toeing Nato's line

An image from the video passed to the BBC shows the body of an ethnic Albanian in the village of Velike Krusa, Kosovo. The man who filmed it hid in terror for days

Finally we had proof

Nick, it's Tony. There's someone here who says he may have something from the other side. The other side. We had been in Kukes for a week and had seen more than 200,000 women, children and elderly people fleeing from their homes into the mountains north of Albania. No one knew what was happening in Kosovo. I had heard stories of murder, executions and rape. But nothing could be confirmed. Everyone needed proof.

An hour after picking up the satellite phone and hearing this, I was driving up the mountain, at every corner passing tractors pulling trailers packed with refugees. The border post was an hour's drive from the town.

George Alagiah and a respected foreign news cameraman, Tony Fallshaw, had overheard a man saying that he had a video from Kosovo. They did not know what was on it. They had only the word of one man who had fled his home.

As always, the next deadline was approaching. George and Tony needed to get back to the room that was now our home to edit for the evening news. I told both of them to leave Sara, our translator, with the man and that I would go and talk to him.

A cheap tape smuggled out of Kosovo provided hard evidence to back the refugees' tales of Serb atrocities. The BBC's Nicholas Springgate tells how he obtained it

At the border post more than 2,000 people were sitting on the ground. In the middle of this scene was a raised hut, with Sara standing outside. She had fled from Pristina to Macedonia, where she ended up working with us. She told me that the man was confused and wanted to tell us what he had seen so the BBC could tell the world what had happened in his village.

In the hut we found Milaim Belanica. A slim man with a pale face, he was staring past the barrier and down the dark road that led to Kosovo and the Serb border crossing. Could this man — who would have been just another face in the thousands of faces there, had he not been pointed out to me — actually have evidence of the atrocities we had all heard about? Milaim was waiting for his brother, who had the tape. His family had been separated by the Serbs on the other side of the border. Half of them were now in Kukes and the other half, including his brother, had still not arrived. He was worried. It was getting late and he knew what the Serbs could do.

He was from the village of Krasa-E-Madhe. On March 25 Serb militia — some of whom he knew — came to the village. Milaim's birthplace. In fear of what might happen, the men had walked to meet the armed militia so that the women and children could flee.

When they realised why they had come, the men tried to escape. More than 100 had been killed, he said. The word "executed" was repeated.

He had hidden in his basement and only came out after five days. Then he was still too afraid to pick up his home video camera. After another two days, he did.

He told me this story over and over again. He produced a list that he had written of 40 of the men whose bodies he had seen. If he was telling the truth, these would be the first pictures from Kosovo since the bombing began.

By now the camera lights that had flooded the border crossing had gone. Hours had passed. Sara was cold. Around us people were burning the boxes that had held their ration packs in order to keep warm. Milaim's brother had not appeared. I handed him a crumpled card with my name and too many telephone numbers on it, and asked him to meet me at dawn at the café where the BBC had based itself. I would be there and just wanted to know if he had the tape or not.

It was worth a try. That was what everyone said when I arrived back that night. If it did exist, the footage would be a world exclusive. Every journalist and news organisation was desperate for the first pictures from the other side.

It was not a wasted journey. I think we both smiled when we saw each other that morning. He handed me the tape. It was wrapped in a plastic bag — a small VHS-C, the kind of tape that people filmed at home in the early 1980s.

Four hours after being handed the tape, the BBC team in Kukes watched it on a monitor. At first it showed Milaim's family at home, pumping up a rubber dinghy. Then the pictures changed. We watched in silence. Seventeen bodies. All men. I noted that a number had single entry marks from the bullets. All had been shot at close range.

At 5pm on Easter Sunday the BBC broadcast the first evidence of mass murder in Kosovo. One man's act of extraordinary bravery had given us much more than a world exclusive. It gave some hope to the hundreds of thousands who had fled their homes that those who committed such acts will not escape justice.

In Milaim's words: "I have done this so that my son and grandson will never forget what the Serbs have done to the Albanian people."

The tape that was handed to me has now been given to the United Nations International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia.

Life with the hard core

Only a few dogged war reporters remain in Belgrade's Hyatt Regency hotel, says Tom Walker

Coming from the reception desk of an international hotel, it was a peculiar answer: "I'm not sure, sir, if I'm supposed to tell you whether we're nice to journalists or not," said the Belgrade Hyatt Regency's front manager.

But these are peculiar times in the Serbian capital, and as the focus of a global press corps that is widely held responsible here for the rain of Nato projectiles, the hotel's management is on a knife edge in its relations with the Serbian and Yugoslav Governments. In terms of media relations, the Hyatt, the finest hotel in what remains of Yugoslavia, did not get off to a good start during the airstrikes. The first night of Nato's phase one is remembered by the few journalists who managed to stay inside Yugoslavia as "the night of the long knives": 30 correspondents who went on to the roof of the hotel, under the impression that they could safely watch the bombardment from there, were arrested, and several were escorted to the border the next day. Most correspondents were released after five hours in the company of the New Belgrade constabulary, and the ground rules of reporting what CNN calls "Strike against Yugoslavia" had been laid down.

Back in the relative safety of the Hyatt, plain-clothes police and security guards went round knocking on the doors of selected correspondents advising them that life outside Yugoslavia was a better option. A collective paranoia set in and the hack exodus was on. "There was this image of the knocks at the door coming up, floor by floor," said a French tabloid journalist. "But the fact is that a lot of people abandoned ship without getting the knock. Many who left Yugoslavia were never directly asked to go." The Hyatt is now the province of the hard-core war correspondents.

Up in the regency suite the tales of past derring-do grow more extravagant by the brandy glass as the BBC's John Simpson, CNN's Brent Sadler, ITN's Julian Mannion and Sky's Tim Marshall fight their corners with gusto. There are some quieter, more ephemeral influences, such as Time magazine's Massimo Calabresi, The Guardian's Maggie O'Kane, and engaging mavericks such as the TV cameraman Nigel Thompson. The few Yugoslavs around tend not to last long since much of the media fare is unpalatable to them. On the night that Tony Blair came out with his glib comment about "bombing with compassion", it was surprising that the wide-screen TV in the drawing room bar survived; many locals simply walked out. Correspondents added to the theatre by arguing over visas and fuel rationing, while Balkan smugglers passed in and out peddling their wares.

The hotel staff exacted some revenge on correspondents by holding rigorous air raid drills. On night two of the strikes journalists were dragged downstairs at least four times; the third time the sirens sounded, staff almost dragged reluctant reporters out of bed. Two floors beneath ground level, kitchen staff were told to put damp towels over their heads because a poisonous gas cloud was coming.

But the Hyatt's staff remain remarkably courteous, and are always ready to give advice to the not-so-streetswise. "They told me to wear sunglasses and a baseball hat the wrong way round if I went out because I looked too foreign," says a cameraman. "That was nice of them." All the while the deprivations of war nibble at the luxurious veneer: the Italian restaurant is closed, and the hot buffet at the Avala restaurant gets steadily more meagre. Bills must be settled in cash.

There are the bizarre touches to life, such as the piped music that still includes the theme from Top Gun. For correspondents Belgrade is a city in weird suspense. Its bridges and ministries awaiting laser-guided Armageddon, while a war and a humanitarian catastrophe, declared out of bounds by the authorities, lie hundreds of miles to the south. To non-journalists it would seem a strange world indeed: in the mornings the only sound echoing down the corridors is that of the BBC World Service — "Music to divorce to," as one correspondent a long way from home put it.

On the road to nowhere

The Serbian border guard stared at our British passports with contempt. "You are killing our children with your bombs," he said as I waited with Dossa Trevisan, the veteran Times correspondent, to cross the border from Hungary into Yugoslavia. My goal: to reach Belgrade to join Tom Walker, the Times reporter there.

We had been waiting more than an hour after being ordered to leave the minibus on which we had travelled from Budapest, watching as it left without us on its way to the Serbian capital.

Now we were alone in a room at the border post in Tompa, policed by combat-fatigued men with guns and a plentiful supply of scorn. Dossa, a diminutive 74-year-old from Serbia, was furious after being denied access to the country in which she has lived most of her life (although she has a British passport). She was trying to return as a private citizen. I, as a journalist.

It transpired that our visas were not only worthless, they were a disadvantage. Two days after the Nato air strikes had begun, a coup of sorts had taken place in Belgrade. Now the names of the Yugoslav Deputy Prime Minister, Vuk Draskovic, and the Information Minister, Milan Kormanec, who had authorised our visas, were mud. The military was in charge and had orders to keep us out.

So began a long, frustrating journey to nowhere. For six days Dossa and I tramped up and down the Hungarian border and backwards and forwards to Budapest after being told on a daily basis to "come back tomorrow".

The tentacles of war spread wide in their attempts to strangle the reporting of news.

Once we were allowed to travel to a café on the Serbian edge of no-man's land. The guard who had blamed us for being responsible for killing Serb children had undergone a character change. After discussing the war with Dossa — who reported on the Hungarian uprising and the Prague Spring — he kissed her on both cheeks then invited all of us into a warm room and gave us whisky, slivovitz and beer.

Our optimism did not last. The shift changed, our new friend departed for his home on a pig farm, and we were ordered out into the cold once more. An hour later we were given back our passports and told to go back to Hungary.

This whole exercise was not a complete waste of time, however, for we gleaned much information while travelling on the bus plying between the Yugoslav and Hungarian capitals. It enabled us to meet Serbs — travelling home from jobs abroad — who were offering to fight and women, children and the elderly who were leaving Serbia to avoid the bombs. Many were suspicious or hostile, but changed their minds after discussing their hopes and fears. They all said they thought we should have been allowed in so that we could tell the world the truth.

EVE-ANN PRENTICE

The unasked questions

Philip Hammond says reporting of the war has been strong on rhetoric and short on genuine attempts to get at the truth

"Most of what passes for 'analysis' is actually a discussion of which strategy would work best for Nato" week's report that last October Clinton turned a deaf ear to intelligence reports that Milosevic might agree to a Nato peace-keeping force in Kosovo. Clinton, battling the Lewinsky scandal, feared committing US troops would damage him too much politically. Yet in Britain, journalists prefer to follow the official line that Yugoslavia's unilateral ceasefire was a "cynical ploy" rather than engage in discussion of the issues involved in reaching a settlement. Neither has there been any real attempt to explain the background to the conflict. Instead, we are offered historical and religious pseudo-explanations. The Sun — worried, perhaps, that "white-van person" might not be immediately convinced of the necessity to "Clobber Slobba" and "Bomb, Bomb, Bomb" — provided a question-and-answer section on "the conflict that's 600 years old". Headlined "What is the war for?" the article asked: "Where is Kosovo?" "What are the different religious groups?" and "Why do they hate each other?" A feature in The Sunday Telegraph presented the conflict as a latter-day Crusade by the Orthodox Church, while TV reporters describe it as a "medieval loot and pillage". Meanwhile, Charles Krauthammer, in The Washington Post, argues that "The reason for the killing in Kosovo is not mindless ethnic hatred but quite rational power politics." Yet it seems that new Labour would prefer us to see it as an epic battle of Good v Evil, started by a "serial ethnic cleanser".

Nor has war in Europe prompted any investigative journalism. The moderate ethnic Albanian leader Ibrahim Rugova was said by Nato to be in hiding before he appeared on TV calling for a halt to the airstrikes. Perhaps British journalists are wary of accepting the Yugoslav version of events, but a French press agency interviewed him. Is there a story to be investigated there, or shall we just stick to the latest Nato press statement on whether Rugova was black-mailed, drugged or coerced?

Similarly, after telling us that the Albanian Rambouillet negotiator Fehmi Agani had been executed, Nato now says his death is "unconfirmed".

Most of what passes for "analysis" is actually a discussion of which strategy would work best for Nato: air-power or ground troops. Far less attention is given to the more fundamental issue of how Nato went to war in the first place and why its aims seem to change on an almost daily basis. First we were told that the Nato bombing campaign was designed to get Milosevic to sign up to the Rambouillet accord. Then we were told that the reason was to avert a humanitarian disaster. Since no international agency declared a "humanitarian crisis" before Nato started bombing, is its mission now simply to clean up their own mess?

Are we really expected to believe that the mass exodus from Kosovo has nothing to do with Nato bombs? What about the tens of thousands of Serbian refugees — are they being "ethnically" cleansed too? How have the Kosovo Liberation Army been transformed from an organisation that the US Government classified as "terrorists" to the group on whom the peaceful future of Kosovo depends?

General Wesley Clark has announced his intention of degrading and ultimately destroying Yugoslavia's military capability. The ability of the British media to inform the public of what is happening in Yugoslavia is also in danger of being severely degraded, if not destroyed altogether.

Pirate radio rules again

Deregulation was meant to increase listener choice and make pirates redundant, so why, asks Ben Osborne, are rebel radio stations now flourishing?

An MC blurs over the crash and splutter of the urban jungle rhythms: "Pe-nu-nu, pe-nu-nu, bah-bah-sexy." Turn the dial a millimetre and a rival station thumps out its own variety of drum 'n' bass. The combined effect wipes BBC GLR off the radio map. A notch further and Fresh is pumping out a street soul selection, and next to that another pirate is jumping between drum 'n' bass and UK garage.

Pirate radio stations are riding the airwaves with all the bravado of 18th-century buccaners. Despite the deregulation of the airwaves in 1990 and the granting of a clutch of licences to specialist stations such as Classic, Jazz, Kiss and Xfm, pirate radio has continued to proliferate and attract a considerable audience. This shouldn't be happening. Deregulation should have increased diversity and listener choice and made pirate redundant.

At the heart of the debate about pirate radio — which targets a small but dedicated audience — is the issue of listener choice, or lack of it. While the industry complains that pirates interfere with its listeners and marketplace, pirate broadcasters (euphemistically termed "radio enthusiasts") point to a business culture in commercial radio that forces stations to broadcast to the lowest common denominator. The pirates argue that deregulation has increased the number of stations owned by a few big companies that play the same material.

It's a point that legitimate broadcasters can appreciate. "Things are so regimented and play-list driven in radio these days," says Gary Crowley, a veteran radio DJ. "Pirate radio is fans playing music which isn't being catered for anywhere else — otherwise they wouldn't bother climbing up towers to stick up aerials."

Fraser Lewery, one-time radio enthusiast and former head of music at Xfm, says: "There's a massive disenfranchised audience that needs something that only pirates provide. Regular radio is stagnating because people aren't willing to be brave; they just stick to what they know. Until the airwaves are liberalised, like they are in New Zealand, all we're going to get is a limited amount of commercial companies sticking to a tried and tested formula."

Recent attempts to break the industry mould seem to support this point. Radio stations such as Xfm and Kiss in London and Crash in Liverpool all made bold attempts to extend listener choice. All have now been turned into more mainstream stations.

Convention has it that these stations had to change because they were failing to attract an audience but this argument is not borne out by listener figures. Kiss consistently reaches a 10 per cent market share but is now being revamped under the direction of its parent company, Emap, to make it more mainstream.

Specialist shows have been moved to "graveyard" slots, playlists have been introduced and some of the original DJs, including Cold Cut, Steve Jackson and Giles Peterson, have departed. By the time Capital bought 90.1 per cent of the independent Xfm, the station (with 3.3 per cent of market share) was reaching more than half of its target listenership, which could explain why Capital was willing to pay £15 million for a large slice of the station.

The result of the watering-down of Xfm has been a loss of listeners. The most recent Rajar figures show Xfm's weekly audience dropping from a pre-take-over high of 329,000 to 244,000.

St John da Silva, a DJ for mid-Nineties pirate station Girls FM, says there is a clear connection between Kiss becoming more mainstream and the proliferation of pirate stations.

"There are more than 20 underground garage stations in London alone," he says. "There's a gap in the market because of what's happened to Kiss. A lot of the specialist shows are missing. That's where the pirates step in. The pirates wouldn't keep going if there wasn't a demand for it."

Both Xfm and Kiss started as pirate operations. "Because pirates are not commercial, they can be a lot braver, and new genres of music tend to get represented on pirate radio before commercial stations," says Lewery. "The people who are most knowledgeable about new genres of music are DJs on pirate stations. If you look at the staffing of pirate in the Eighties, the number who are now on Radio 1 is phenomenal."

It costs £10,600 just to apply for a Greater London FM licence from the Radio Authority and a new station can expect to make at least three bids before succeeding. Once a licence has been obtained a Greater London FM station has to pay a further fee of between £65,000 and £73,000 a year. A transmitter for a pirate station costs just £400.

New Zealand, which deregulated its airwaves in the late Eighties, opted for a more accessible arrangement by making it much cheaper and easier to get a licence. It now has four times as many stations as the UK, serving a population of just 2.5 million. The advent of digital radio in the UK means that there is potential for more stations and greater choice. "The Radio Authority needs to look carefully at how they are going to regulate digital," says Lewery.

"We don't need another 40 versions of Emap-formatted radio. Part of the authority's role is to safeguard the future of broadcasting. Handing over licences to big, successful radio companies is the wrong way to go about it."

TV boss seeks to lift ban

The top executives of Med TV, the satellite channel broadcasting to millions of Kurds in Europe and the Middle East, will today give undertakings to the Independent Television Commission about their future behaviour.

The promises will form part of a last minute appeal to the commission by the Kurds to try to win back their broadcasting licence. The ITC suspended Med TV's licence on March 22 for repeated breaches of broadcasting rules and said it had 21 days to make representations on why the ban should not become permanent.

The broadcasts in question carried material likely to encourage or incite crime and disorder. The ITC was concerned that Kurdish extremists had been advocating attacks on tourists in Turkey.

In another broadcast the presenter sat immobile while, off camera, a member of the military wing of the Kurdish Workers Party read out a statement in which he said Kurds should stop burning themselves (there have been a number of self-immolations) and burn Turks instead.

The members of the commission will this morning hear representations from Med TV, which is estimated to have up to 16 million viewers.

Haikmet Tabak, the managing director, said yesterday that he would give the ITC detailed promises about future behaviour. "We know we have been a headache to the ITC in the past," he acknowledged.

The ITC issued formal warnings and fined Med TV £90,000 before suspending its licence. The commission has even staged internal seminars for senior Med TV executives on the rules and regulations of British broadcasting legislation.

The ITC has the power of life or death over Med TV because its signal goes up to the Eutelsat satellite from the UK, after the programmes are put together in Brussels. The Med TV executive will tell the ITC that in future greater emphasis will be put on children's programmes, entertainment and cultural and music programmes. "I am confident we will be able to continue broadcasting," Mr Tabak said. The ITC will still take a considerable amount of convincing.

Changing the face of race reporting

Margaret Michie spent 15 years trying to ensure fair coverage of race issues. At last she sees signs of success, she tells Henry Bonsu

Last night ITV launched its flagship current affairs programme with what may go down as one of the scoops of the decade: Martin Bashir grilling the five men suspected of Britain's most notorious race murder.

That its producer, Granada, should choose this story to announce the arrival of Tonight shows how far the issue of race has become mainstream.

In the week of the Stephen Lawrence inquiry report, Fleet Street expended 1,672 column inches on Sir William Macpherson of Cluny's findings, and on the need for British society to change.

Since then tabloids and broadsheets have kept the momentum going, reporting on institutionalised racism in the police, schools and government departments.

For Margaret Michie, 47, who has spent 15 years of her career trying to put a positive spin on race relations, the change in the media's willingness to report such stories has been seismic. Michie has just left her job as a senior press officer at the Commission for Racial Equality to join the Portman Group, where she will be promoting the healthy consumption of alcohol.

When she joined the CRE in 1984 "a massive just society", she found that persuading newspapers to be positive about race was an uphill struggle. Michie recalls being taken aback by the reporting of Britain's inner city riots of 1981 and 1985. What these areas had in common were social deprivation, and tensions between the police and the local black community, but this was overlooked. "The tenor of the coverage was, at one end, rightly horrified by the violent civil disorder, but on the other the press hadn't tried to understand why the riots had occurred," she says.

The media were not interested in the recommendations of the subsequent Scarman report or the later Swann report on the education of black children. "Most papers were preoccupied with reporting the violence of black rioters against the police. Some of the sensational language was used to depict all ethnic minority communities."

Rioting on the Broadwater Farm Estate in Tottenham in 1985, and the murder of PC Keith Blakelock, produced the headline "Kill! Kill! Kill!" in the Daily Express of October 8.

"Hacked to Death by Hyenas", screamed the Daily Star. Newspapers also ran stories linking black communities with crime in general. Two that stand out in the CRE library are the Daily Mail's "Black Crime: The Alarming Figures", from May 1982, and The Sun's "Black Muggers Blamed by Yard", from May 1982.

Those of us in the media office were fielding calls from the public saying that they were outraged. People were worried that these kinds of stories would not just inform the public, but change their attitude for the worse."

The number of race-related complaints to the Press Council jumped from 38 in 1984 to 82 in 1985 and averaged around 80 per year for the rest of the decade. The council rebuked the "intemperate" and

Margaret Michie, former senior press officer at the CRE, feels that more journalists are reporting positively on race issues

"sensationalised" language of many newspapers, and Lord Scarman warned editors to use responsibly the power they had to influence attitudes.

Michie, a former teacher, believed that journalists could be educated out of a tendency to use inflammatory language if they could be made to understand the wider social context of race-related stories. But it wouldn't be easy. The 1980s were the years of what she calls "a creeping style of anti-racism", which led to any pro-black, ie affirmative, action being attacked.

She also accuses newspapers of being reluctant to confirm the "racial" nature of attacks on ethnic minorities, and what the police were doing about them. For Michie and her colleagues, things began to significantly change at the end of the Eighties when the NUJ and the Press Council reviewed their codes of practice. As a result editors and journalists were instructed not to include gratuitous mention of a person's ethnic origin.

Thus, the move from the Thatcher to the Major years was characterised by a different climate in race reporting. Regular briefings with selected journalists were beginning to pay off.

In 1991 the Daily Mail and The Mail on Sunday highlighted the cases of black soldiers Stephen Anderson and Anthony Evans, who suffered racism in the Army. The publicity helped to persuade the Armed Forces to sign up in 1997 to a five-year CRE action plan to drive out racism.

Nothing prepared Michie for the Mail's decision two years ago to name five white youths "as the killers of Stephen Lawrence, making it a story that merited the Prime Minister's attention. "What the Mail did was lead the others into an area they hadn't been in before. It's one thing to put five faces on the cover, another to call for a public inquiry and another to cover it regularly, then look at its findings," she says.

This new climate has seen the CRE take some bold decisions, on occasion becoming the story itself. Last year its shock poster campaign depicting black men as muggers, rapists and orang-utans, then criticising the public for failing to complain, attracted widespread press condemnation.

Michie says the CRE thought hard about the decision, and she makes no apology for it.

It was a sign of the CRE's confidence that in 1992 it inaugurated the forthcoming annual Race in the Media Awards (RIMA), of which Michie has taken charge. Last year's competition had twice as many categories as the first, attracting entries from radio and TV, and many national newspapers. Michie says: "When we started in 1992 the problem was to find a journalist who had written about race in an informed manner. This year the difficulty will be to make awards because so many have written and done so much about race relations."

Two cheers for digital

At last it can be said officially that digital television has got off to a respectable start. The announcement yesterday of ONdigital's first subscriber figures since the digital terrestrial channel came on air last November show a creditable performance. Naturally, journalists prodded the 110,000 total to see if there were hidden extras. But ONdigital was emphatic that the figure represented paying subscribers only, or those who had already signed their contracts and would join within days.

What's more, the number of subscribers has been accelerating month-on-month and in March 30,000 households signed up to receive more than 30 channels through conventional television aerials.

ONdigital could not resist using a little sophistry to claim that it is growing faster than Sky Digital. Of the 350,000 Sky Digital subscribers signed up in ONdigital's first four months, only 120,000 were new customers, as opposed to those trading up from old analogue systems. Since ONdigital is for now available in only 70 per cent of the country, it could just claim that its 110,000 represented faster growth than Sky's 120,000 new subscribers.

The propaganda wars will continue to be fun, but it is significant that there are possibly 600,000 homes with digital, multichannel television, — a figure that is likely to rise to 1.5 million by the end of the year.

The arrival in June of ESO Bush television sets with embedded subscription systems, avoiding the need for separate black boxes, should provide a further boost, as will the pay-per-view film digital terrestrial service planned by SDL later this year.

It appears, on the admittedly slim evidence of the first real numbers, that a significant slice of Middle England would like more television, but not too much, and possibly not via a satellite dish. This suggests that there will be room for three competing systems and viewers can choose the package that suits them best.

News of the spread of digital terrestrial came at almost exactly the same time yesterday as Chris Smith, the Culture, Media and Sports Secretary, was launching a report examining the obstacles preventing Britain exploring more television programmes.

Ironically, the small surplus the UK once had in its television trade with the rest of the world has been tipped into deficit by the large flow of American imports needed to service our expanding cable and satellite sector.

The report highlights the old split between television as a commercial industry and a regulated, cultural product. Some of its recommendations are plainly sensible, such as looking at incentives, including tax breaks, to encourage broadcasters and others to invest in original programme production. Likewise, something could be done about the length of programmes which do not fit the schedules of foreign broadcasters. Things start to go awry when it is suggested that domestic regulation may be hindering exports. If the suggestion is that regulators are insisting that British broadcasters make programmes of a particular quality for the British audience and that these are not all equally popular abroad, then so be it.

M6 Television in France, for instance, rejected Prime Suspect, Granada's award-winning police series, because it was so realistic, dark and perverse. Is it being seriously suggested that such a programme should not be made — or at least not in that way?

Italy's Canale 5 says "television should be about entertainment and escapism", while other potential purchasers say "too British".

A partial solution is already here. While more strenuous efforts are made to sell uncompromisingly British programmes abroad, there is no reason why British broadcasters should not make more programmes aimed specifically at world markets. It's what Pearson Television has been doing for years.

IN ADVERTISING, the most obvious ideas are often the best. The genius lies in spotting the obvious. So the understandable reaction to news that Steven Spielberg's E.T. character will be the new face of BT's advertising is — why did no one think of that before?

One reason is that BT has enjoyed huge success with its call-stimulation campaigns featuring Buzby, the animated bird; Maureen Lipman as Beatrice; and, more recently, Bob Hoskins. Hugh Laurie and other celebrities reminding us that "it's good to talk".

But "it's good to talk" had run its course. BT needed a rethink and opted to review its entire advertising arrangements, separating out tasks such as advertising to young people and business-to-business advertising and giving them to new agencies.

About Mead Vickers BDDO, the agency behind "it's good to talk", managed to hold on to the lion's share of the business, however. And the idea that won the February pitch for the £60 million billing account focused on E.T. and the new slogan, "stay in touch".

No, it's not "phone home", thankfully. That would have led to endless mimic-taking and might have been self-defeating. Instead, BT garners the benefits of the character's famous line without having to resort to such banality.

In any case, Universal Studios and Spielberg's Amblin Entertainment, with which AMV had to negotiate, would not have allowed E.T.'s image to be used if the character were actually to sell the product in the ads. Spielberg is supposed to be seeing the finished commercials (directed by Paul Weiland of City Slickers 2 and Walker's Crisps fame) this week to check that they do not "compromise the character's integrity".

The ads will be launched this week-end with a series of "teasers" in which we see E.T. circling Earth, astonished by some of the changes in evidence since he was last here in 1982.

A blockbuster 60-second commercial in which E.T. returns to Earth will follow next month. Weiland has created new footage for the magnificent soundtrack, amid ridiculous secrecy. But the gist of it is that E.T. is amazed by the changes in communications technology, and is on a mission to help people to take advantage of them — including the Internet, data transfer and multimedia.

E.T.'s suitability as a "celebrity endorser" lies not just in the "phone home" line but in his intuitive ability in the original film to understand what Elliott and his sister are thinking. This is what the movie-style central ad will pick up on.

But isn't E.T. rather an Eighties icon? If the thought occurs to us, it certainly will have occurred to the agency and to BT. But after exhaustive research, both concluded that the appeal of E.T. is ageless. The film may be 17 years old but even consumers too young to have seen it originally are familiar with key moments.

The ads will not be cheap — but then Maureen Lipman, Bob Hoskins and Hugh Laurie do not come cheap either. And BT will get its money's worth from the campaign: television, posters, press ads, direct mail and educational materials will all feature the image of the finger and the "stay in touch" line. Perhaps it will be exported overseas, too. One thing is for sure: given the £50 million budget, we will all become maddeningly familiar with the idea.

FOR clients with shallower pockets than BT, the 60-second commercial has a limited lifespan and, thereafter, cheaper ten-second cutdowns are used in an attempt to eke out the budget — often to confusing effect.

An example of how this can backfire is the current NSPCC campaign. The idea of familiar icons, from teddy bears and Action Men to the Spice Girls and Alan Shearer, covering their eyes against a background of the malevolent things that adults say to children is one of the most powerful charity campaigns around — the more so for not showing the actual cruelty or the victims.

However, in the cut-down, all we are left with is the desperate mother screaming threats at her distressed child. "If you don't shut up, I'll..." This is a scenario familiar to almost every parent of a young child at some stage in the average week. And the threat is almost always an empty one. To tar all parents with the opprobrium deserved by, for example, the man in the longer ad who climbs into bed urging "this will just be our little secret..." seems offensive.

Overall, this is a disturbing and moving campaign. It seems a shame to alienate people who would be well disposed to its message just because of a change of context brought about by financial restraints.

Stefano Hatfield is the Editor of Campaign.

E.T. moves to BT: why did nobody think of such a good idea before?

Court of Appeal

Law Report April 9 1999

Court of Appeal

Council liability for acts of travellers

Lippiatt and Another v South Gloucestershire Council

Before Lord Justice Evans, Lord Justice Mummery and Sir Christopher Staughton (Judgment March 31)

An occupier of land might be held liable for a nuisance where that took the form of repeated acts on the plaintiffs' land committed by persons who were to the occupier's knowledge based on his land.

The Court of Appeal allowed the appeal of the plaintiffs, Peter Richard Lippiatt and Richard Kirby, against the judgment of Judge Weeks QC, sitting as a judge of the High Court in the Bristol District Registry, on June 1, 1998, when he found in favour of South Gloucestershire Council, successor authority to the County Council, and dismissed the plaintiffs' claim for damages against the council for alleged nuisance caused by travellers' farmstead by travellers occupying the council's neighbouring land, on the basis that the claim had no reasonable prospects of success.

The Court of Appeal remitted the case to Bristol District Registry for trial.

The plaintiffs, tenant farmers of about 450 acres from the Duke of Beaufort, lived on either side of the 450 foot between Bath and Bristol, claimed, inter alia, that a strip of land of about 300 yards on the eastern side of the road which was owned by the council was occupied by travellers in considerable numbers in caravans from 1960 until their eviction on the council's application by court order in June 1994, that the travellers frequently trespassed on the plaintiffs' land, obstructed access to their adjacent field, dumped rubbish and left excrement on it, left their dogs, ponies and horses, stole timber, gates and fences, damaged the stone wall at its edge, permitted their dogs to chase the plaintiffs' sheep and acted helligerously towards the plaintiffs, their families, employees and neighbours and assaulted them, and that such acts damaged and diminished crops and rendered them unfit for sale or consumption.

Mr Barry Payton and Mr Philip Norman for the plaintiffs; Mr W. David Spens for the council.

LORD JUSTICE EVANS said that the judge accepted the council's submission that the claim had no prospect of success as a matter of law because of Hussain v Lancaster City Council (The Times May 26, 1998) 96 LGR 663, and he struck out the plaintiffs' claim as disclosing no cause of action.

His Lordship said that the claim was of activities by travellers which took place off the council's land and in all respects save one on the land of the plaintiffs themselves.

Mr Spens accepted that the one exception, the allegation that the travellers barred entry to the plaintiffs' land, could give rise to liability in nuisance because, if it occurred, there was a direct interference with the plaintiffs' use and enjoyment of their own land.

He submitted that no actionable nuisance was alleged because the activities relied on were those of independent third parties, and they took place outside the council's land.

Mr Payton submitted that such a contention had been rejected in Attorney-General v Corke (1933) Ch 89 and was not supported by Hussain.

In his Lordship's view, Mr Payton was entitled to submit that the point raised by the council was decided in Corke against the defendant in an action for nuisance, but equally, Mr Spens was right to say that the claim was brought in that case in respect of a public nuisance.

However, Smith v Scott (1973) Ch 314 provided clear authority that Corke was correctly decided and, more generally, that there was no rule of law which prevented the owner or occupier of land from being held liable for the tort of nuisance by reason of the activities of his licensees which took place off his land.

Further support was provided by Thompson-Schwab v Costello (1956) 1 WLR 339.

In his Lordship's view, the facts alleged in Hussain were materially different from those in the present case.

The disturbance there complained of was a public nuisance for which the individual perpetrators could be held liable, and they were identified as individuals who lived in council property, but their conduct was not in any sense linked to, nor did it emanate from, homes where they lived.

The allegation in the present case was that the travellers were allowed to congregate on the council's land and that they used it as a base for the unlawful activities of which the plaintiffs complained.

It was at least arguable that that could give rise to liability in nuisance, and so the claim should not be struck out.

It seemed to his Lordship that upon proof of the alleged facts, and subject to any defences, such liability could be established.

The council's objection that the claim could not succeed as a matter of law had to be rejected.

LORD JUSTICE MUMMERY, agreeing, added that the judge did not appreciate the scope of the plaintiffs' pleaded case or the reach of the law of nuisance.

That was not altogether surprising as the statement of claim was not as clearly drafted as it might have been, and his attention was not drawn to cases from which it appeared that an occupier of land might be held liable in nuisance in exceptional circumstances.

Those circumstances were that the plaintiffs' use and enjoyment of their rights in their land was interfered with by the continuing presence on the defendant's land of persons whose actual or apprehended activities included, to the knowledge of the defendant, harmful acts which could be held liable, and the plaintiffs' land from their base on land occupied by the defendant.

Scott and Thompson-Schwab were not cited in Hussain.

The latter case was concerned with a landlord. He was held not to be liable in nuisance for the activities of his tenant which did not involve use of the land leased by him to the tenant.

There was nothing in that case which precluded a court from holding that an occupier of land might be held liable for a nuisance which consisted of a continuing state of affairs existing on his land where that nuisance manifested itself in the form of repeated acts on the plaintiffs' land, and those acts were, to the knowledge of the occupier, committed by persons based on his land and they interfered with the plaintiffs' use and enjoyment of their land.

It was reasonably arguable that the continuing presence of the travellers on the council's land constituted a nuisance to the plaintiffs' use and enjoyment of their rights in their land, even though the travellers' activities involved using the council's land as a launching pad for repeated acts of trespass on the plaintiffs' land.

In the circumstances the case was reasonably arguable in law on the state of the pleadings, and the judge should not have struck out the claim.

Sir Christopher Staughton gave a judgment agreeing that the appeal should be allowed.

Solicitors: Moger & Sparrow, Bath; Mr Eric J. Andrews, Thornbury.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS said that the point raised on the appeal had regularly given rise to problems under the Arbitration Act 1950. However, the language of section 9(3) of the 1996 Act was different from that in section 4(1) of the 1950 Act.

Application was not a step in the proceedings

Patel v Patel

Before Lord Woolf, Master of the Rolls, Lord Justice Otton and Lord Justice Ward (Judgment March 24)

A defendant who applied for a default judgment to be set aside and for leave to defend and counterclaim had not taken any step in the proceedings to answer the substantive claim so as to prevent him being granted a stay of the action in favour of arbitration pursuant to section 9 of the Arbitration Act 1996.

The Court of Appeal so held in allowing the appeal of the defendant, Dilish R. Patel, against the dismissal by Judge Wilson, sitting on official referee's business on October 16, 1998, of his summons to stay the action of the plaintiff, Jitendra Bhailal Patel, for breach of a building contract in favour of arbitration pursuant to section 9 of the 1996 Act.

Section 9 of the 1996 Act provides: "3) An application for a stay may not be made by a person... after he has taken any step in those proceedings to answer the substantive claim."

Mr Mark Rosedale for the defendant; Mr Adam Chambers for the plaintiff.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS said that the point raised on the appeal had regularly given rise to problems under the Arbitration Act 1950. However, the language of section 9(3) of the 1996 Act was different from that in section 4(1) of the 1950 Act.

The issue was whether the application for a stay of the plaintiff's action had been made by the defendant before or after he had taken any step in those proceedings to answer the substantive claim.

The defendant had acknowledged service and endorsed the acknowledgment with a statement of intention to defend the action. Section 9(3) required the defendant to take that step before applying to stay an action.

The plaintiff had then issued a default judgment, there having been no defence served.

The defendant had issued a summons seeking an order (i) that the default judgment be set aside and that he be given leave to defend and counterclaim and (ii) that consequential directions be given.

The judge had taken the view that because of the terms of the summons, and, in particular, because the defendant had asked to be given leave to defend the action and counterclaim, the defendant had taken a step in the proceedings to answer the substantive claim.

The question was whether the judge had been right to come to that conclusion.

The defendant had drawn attention to the fact that the long title of the 1996 Act indicated that it was an Act to restate and improve the law of arbitration; it was not merely a consolidating Act.

The fact that the defendant had applied to set aside the default judgment could not be of any assistance to the plaintiff.

Unless such an application had been made there would have been nothing to stay. Therefore, if the defendant had merely asked for the default judgment to be set aside he would undoubtedly have been entitled to a stay.

But the defendant had asked for leave to defend the action and counterclaim. The plaintiff had said that that was a clear indication that he was going to defend the action and counterclaim.

His Lordship recognised the force of that submission. However, the fact was that the defendant did not need leave to defend and counterclaim; he was entitled to do so once the default judgment had been set aside, that was in fact one of the relief that he needed.

He had also asked for consequential directions but that was ambivalent. One direction could have been for a stay. There was no sign of evasion in that request.

Therefore the appeal turned on whether, by asking for something other than the relief that he needed, the defendant was to be deprived of his right under the Act to a stay.

It seemed to his Lordship that if the mere inclusion of something other than a summons of this sort due to the defendant of his right under the Act to a stay that would be inconsistent with the spirit of the Act.

His Lordship would allow the appeal and grant the defendant a stay of the action.

Solicitors: Manis, Thornton Heath; Myers Ebner & Deane Hammersmith.

Oral agreement for sub-tenancy valid as assignment

Pare (Battersea) Ltd (in administrative receivership) and Another v Hutchinson

Before Lord Justice Moore-Bick (Judgment March 18)

Section 53(1)(b) of the Law of Property Act 1925 provides that an assignment of a leasehold interest in land by operation of law need not be in writing. Accordingly, a valid oral agreement for the creation of a sub-tenancy for a period not less than the remaining term of the lease, under which the grantor himself held, took effect as an assignment of the remainder of the greater term.

Mr Justice Moore-Bick, sitting as an additional judge of the Chancery Division, so held in a reserved judgment handed down in chambers, allowing the appeal of the plaintiffs, Pare Battersea Ltd and Moorcroft Holdings Ltd, both in administrative receivership, from the decision by Master Munton of November 17, 1998 of their application for summary judgment on their claim for possession subject to the determination of the preliminary issues of (a) whether a tenancy, created by the defendant, Mr Tom Hutchinson, by way of licence was a tenancy for a term certain expiring on or after March 31, 1996; and if so (b) whether that tenancy operated as an assignment of Monarun Ltd's lease in so far as it related to premises comprised in the tenancy.

MR JUSTICE MOORE-BICK said that on December 4, 1997 the plaintiffs granted a lease over part of some land situated at Battersea, London, to Monarun Ltd for a fixed term expiring on March 31, 1998. Steps were taken to exclude that lease from the operation of sections 24 to 26 of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954.

By an oral agreement made on December 8, 1997 Monarun sub-let part of that land to the defendant, Pare Battersea Ltd, at a rent of £300 a month. The defendant entered into occupation on December 15.

When Monarun's lease expired by effluxion of time the plaintiffs sought to take possession of the property. The plaintiffs discovered that Mr Hutchinson was in occupation of part of the land.

Furthermore, Mr Hutchinson claimed that he was entitled to remain in occupation because Monarun had granted him a monthly periodic tenancy which was protected under the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954.

While a sub-tenancy in favour of Mr Hutchinson, even if granted in breach of the terms of the headlease, was capable of falling within the terms of the 1954 Act (see Di Silvio v Lister House Development Ltd (1971) 1 Ch 17), Mr Dutton submitted that the grant of a sub-lease for a period not less than the remaining term of the lease under which the grantor himself held took effect not as a sub-lease but as an assignment of the remainder of the grantor's term.

In Milmo v Corran (1994) 1 KB 306, 310 applied by Lord Justice Slade in Trustees of Henry Smith's Charity v Willson (1993) 1 QB 316 and by Lord Justice Ralph Gibson in Grosvenor Estate Belgrave v Cockburn (1992) ECLR 55, 54, Lord Greene, Master of the Rolls, said:

"Where a lessee, by a document in the form of a sub-lease, divests himself of everything that he has got (which he must necessarily do if he is transferring to his so-called sub-lessee an estate as great as, or purporting to be greater than, his own) he from that moment on is a stranger to the land, in the sense that the relationship of landlord and tenant cannot exist any longer between him and the so-called sub-lessee."

If those authorities covered the present case, there could be no answer to the plaintiffs' claim for possession of the property, because by virtue of the assignment Mr Hutchinson received only an underlease (see St Giles Hotel Ltd v Microcass Technology Ltd (1997) 2 EGLR 105).

Mr Jefferies sought to distinguish those cases on the basis that a valid oral agreement for a sub-tenancy extending for the whole of the remainder of the term could not operate as an assignment of the grantor's term because it was not possible to assign a term other than by a written instrument.

Accordingly such an agreement was of no effect in law, and Mr Hutchinson became a monthly periodic tenant by virtue of entering into possession and making payment of rent.

A person seeking to assign a lease must generally either execute an assignment in the form of a deed, in which case the instrument will be capable of transferring a legal estate by operation of section 52 of the 1925 Act, or he must execute a written instrument which can be construed as an enforceable contract to assign the lease which satisfies the requirements of section 53, and now also section 2 of the Law of Property (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1989.

Mr Dutton submitted that the grant of an oral tenancy for a period which exceeded the remainder of the greater term could assign a lease as an assignment by operation of law, an exception to the requirement that such interests might only be disposed of in writing found within section 53(1)(a) itself.

In Milmo v Corran it was only the operation of the rule of law which the court recognised and applied which enabled the conveyance represented by the oral tenancy agreement to take effect without being under seal.

In the present case Monarun did not set out to assign its term to Mr Hutchinson. The agreement was incapable of creating an effective sub-tenancy because Monarun had no reversion, and there was no privity of estate between them.

If the agreement had any effect at all it could only be as an assignment of Monarun's term, but that could only occur by operation of law, that is, the rule in Milmo v Corran.

Section 53(1)(a) was therefore apt to cover the position where an oral transaction which would otherwise be effective in accordance with its terms took effect by operation of law in a manner different from that contemplated by the parties.

It was not anomalous for the assignment of a lease, which would ordinarily require writing, could be effected orally in that way as an assignment by operation of law in that manner could only occur in limited circumstances. It was no more anomalous than the fact that an agreement for a short lease could also be made orally.

periodic tenancy which was protected under the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954.

While a sub-tenancy in favour of Mr Hutchinson, even if granted in breach of the terms of the headlease, was capable of falling within the terms of the 1954 Act (see Di Silvio v Lister House Development Ltd (1971) 1 Ch 17), Mr Dutton submitted that the grant of a sub-lease for a period not less than the remaining term of the lease under which the grantor himself held took effect not as a sub-lease but as an assignment of the remainder of the grantor's term.

In Milmo v Corran (1994) 1 KB 306, 310 applied by Lord Justice Slade in Trustees of Henry Smith's Charity v Willson (1993) 1 QB 316 and by Lord Justice Ralph Gibson in Grosvenor Estate Belgrave v Cockburn (1992) ECLR 55, 54, Lord Greene, Master of the Rolls, said:

THE TIMES
EDUCATIONReal-life
lesson in drugs

Teenagers are tuning into a BBC docusoap. Hannah Betts reports

The BBC's latest docusoap, Jailbirds — set in New Hall Prison, Wakefield, West Yorkshire — has come as a gift for teachers who want to incorporate real-life stories into their school's drug-prevention programmes. Melissa Meredith, 18, who is a former heroin addict and one of the series' participants, has turned out to be a powerful negative role model.

When the programme showed her arrival in prison, it became clear that her morning heroin hit was not the only reason she greeted her surroundings with incomprehension: Melissa is from what is termed a "good home" and her parents believe that peer pressure led to her addiction. Her transition, from an ambitious girl who had been expected to do well in nine GCSEs at her local secondary school to a prisoner, took only 12 months. Drug addiction changed Melissa into a jailbird, something that neither her parents nor she had expected.

Chris Terrill, the creator of Jailbirds, aims to make socially responsive programmes, but he felt on this particular by-product of the series almost by accident, during a talk about his career to sixth-formers at Brighton College, an independent school.

"As soon as I began showing Jailbirds, the group was on the edge of its seat," Mr Terrill explains. "I spent five years as a teacher, so I'm very aware of young people's huge hunger for facts at that age."

The experience at Brighton is just the tip of the iceberg. In Jailbirds' first week on air, the programme's helpline received 150 calls. After Melissa's story was broadcast, 4,000 people, mostly young, phoned about drugs.

Mr Terrill sees this as a testament to the docusoap aesthetic, show don't judge. "Traditionally, the drugs message is given a preachy approach that can be a turn-off to more rebellious youngsters. We wanted to do something different."

Anthony Seldon, Headmaster of Brighton College, endorses the approach. "Kids need deterrents, but are bored by policemen holding up banned packages. This series plays to a different part of their psyche, appealing to their emotions."

Brighton College has never adopted a head-in-the-sand attitude towards drugs. A visit from Leah Betts's father last term demonstrated to students that drugs can be the cause of an untimely death, but before Jailbirds, few had appreciated the deadening effects drugs can have on one's life.

Mr Seldon says: "It's not just that they say this isn't a middle-class thing. Young people use every reason they can to claim that they won't be affected, that it's about northerners or southerners; teenagers' skills of projection rarely extend to seeing the potential impact on the people who care about them most: their parents. Children don't think of the parental point of view. They need to be made to think from this perspective. Seeing Melissa's parents weeping at home shocked the youngsters into some sort of realisation."

If evidence were needed of the unglamorous reality of the post-docusoap lives of the Jailbirds stars, it is the Easter holiday that Melissa has just passed at home. Trying to kick her habit for the seventh time in as many months, she was confined to the house, continually watched over by her parents.

Eight months after the series was made, Bob Meredith, Melissa's father and a construction company general foreman in Barton-upon-Humber, says: "My wife and I have come to cracking up. We did the programme as a deterrent to other children. Ultimately, if Melissa can get her act together, I'd like her to go into schools to tell kids how dangerous drugs are."

Now off heroin, Melissa is accepting her celebrity status. Whether or not she turns apostle, it is Melissa's own words that offer the most powerful message of this modern morality tale of Jailbirds: "If you're on it, get off it, because you will end up the same."

"You'll think, I wouldn't ever end up in jail, or robbing; but you will. It just turns you bad. Bad. Lower than low."

Still time to avert strike chaos

One astounding fact stood out from the hundreds of debates, fringe meetings and briefings that have taken place in the fortnight of classroom union conferences, which ends today. It was the revelation to a disbelieving press corps that the National Union of Teachers had not held a national strike for 30 years. Had our ears been deceiving us as we endured Easter after Easter of nub-thumping? Perhaps: it appears that the annual seaside spectacle, which a rival union leader once said caused teachers to switch off news bulletins in embarrassment, last resulted in a one-day strike in 1969. There have been boycotts, work-to-rules and co-ordinated local strikes, but the threats of "classroom chaos" that punctuate every NUT conference have somehow never materialised.

One reason is the union's tightly framed rulebook, which enables the comparatively moderate leadership to block most calls to the barricades. Demands for action that pass this hurdle face the need for a two-thirds majority of eligible voters (not just those voting) if there is any question of members making claims on the quaintly named "sustenance fund".

It takes rare unanimity from the NUT's perpetually warring political factions, and genuine feeling among the 190,000 members, to turn conference rhetoric into militant practice.

Might the issue of performance-related pay create such conditions? It appears so, when even the more moderate Association of Teachers and Lecturers is prepared to contemplate industrial action and the National Association of Schoolmasters and Union of Women Teachers is keeping this weapon in reserve in case negotiation fails. The NUT leadership is behind the call for a strike, rather than trying to frustrate militant opponents, and conference delegates of all political shades were determined to make a stand against the Government's proposals.

Should parents, in that case, prepare themselves for a summer — and even an autumn — of disruption to school life? Probably not, for a number of reasons. The NUT's ordinary members, predominantly in primary schools, will be harder to convince than the conference firebrands that strike action will "force" the Government to come up with £3,000 pay rises all round. The other unions are upping the ante in the hope of weakening the link between pay and pupils' results, but they are a long way from strike action.

Even the NUT is proposing only a one-day strike next term. Public examinations will not be affected, although the union could decide to target national curriculum tests, which they have always resented. Sustained strike action — if it comes at all — is likely to be in the autumn, but that presupposes that feelings will still be running as high after the long summer holiday, when the scheme may have been amended.

However, it would be a mistake for the politicians to believe that opposition to their current proposals is confined to those whose idea of an enjoyable Easter is a rerun of the debates they held the previous year. Head teachers, for example, are rightly concerned that annual appraisal of all their staff will take up an inordinate amount of time, while the Institute of Personnel has warned against using the same process for career development and salary purposes.

The real obstacle to agreement with the teachers, however, is their fear of payment by results. The NUT is particularly vehement on the subject because the whole history of the union is bound up with resistance to the Victorian system, which divided schools and saw teachers evicted from tied cottages. Ministers are yet to convince classroom practitioners that their scheme bears no resemblance to its 19th-century predecessor, although anyone who has examined the detail of their proposals should have no doubt. Pupils' results will be only one element of performance and schools will be able to set the targets they choose, taking account of the prior achievement of each class.

To some extent David Blunkett and his colleagues have been hoist with their own petard in trying to spell out every stage of the process. Head teachers should have as much flexibility as possible to see that the best teachers are rewarded, and the Government's understandable insistence on "something for something" should not mean the loading of additional and possibly unnecessary responsibilities on to those who seek recognition. The main purpose of the exercise is to keep the best teachers in the classroom, not to divert them into extraneous activities.

Once teachers are convinced that this will be the outcome, the spectre of prolonged industrial action will surely recede. Even those with doubts about the scheme will recognise that government offers of £1 billion do not come around very often and, in the real world, are hardly likely to come with no strings attached.

Why girls seem smarter

How you learn depends on gender, says Tony Mooney

Girls are so far ahead in the academic battle of the sexes that boys have become an educational underclass. The conventional explanation, when boys did better than girls in mathematics and science, and roles were reversed with languages, was that differences in brain function were responsible: male brains were thought to be built in a way that allowed them to perform better in tests that asked them to imagine objects three-dimensionally in space, while girls had natural linguistic abilities.

Many researchers doubted the brain-function theories, arguing that male superiority in spatial-ability tests came from stereotyped behaviour in children's play. Children who engaged in "masculine" play with toy bricks, trucks and trains were more likely to develop spatial abilities than those who engaged in "feminine" games with dolls and role play. Feminine play led to higher verbal skills.

One experiment led to the promotion of another theory. A spatial-ability test was presented in a game format that involved moving characters around a screen. Boys outperformed girls when the characters were named "pirates" but when they were called "honey bears", the girls reached the same level as the boys.

Recent work at Greenwich University by Mark Brosnan has shed more light. Using spatial-ability tests with 35 male and 49 female students from two sixth-form colleges, Dr Brosnan found that the performance of the girls depended on how the tests were introduced. When a test's spatial nature was emphasised, the girls performed worse than the boys. But there was no difference in performance when the tests were introduced as being designed to identify individuals who were good at understanding other people's problems by isolating central issues.

As the idea of gender differences in mental capacities has begun to lose credibility, researchers have focused on the different ways in which the sexes learn. Research can be contradictory, but an analysis of 22 studies around the world has found some common strands and suggested that there are some clear gender differences in the learning process.

A study at the University of Amsterdam suggests that women have more of a "surface approach" to learning than men: they are more inclined to commit learning to memory. Though the researchers do not make the link, because schools still emphasise the ability to memorise, this could be one explanation for the success of girls.

Teachers play a particularly important role in female learning because girls tend to want tasks defined in more detail than boys do. Such an approach is likely to appeal to a teacher's feeling of self-importance and to meet a favourable response, which is encouraging to girls. The emphasis teachers place on the consequences of academic failure is another advantage to girls in school. The Dutch academics also found that fear of failure was a factor that improved the learning capabilities of girls. Boys seem to have a more cavalier attitude to learning.

A study at Lancaster, Durham and Sheffield universities and London University's Institute of Education also identified motinational reasons behind girls' superior performance. Using data on almost 1,200 children in two comprehensives, the researchers found that girls are more "task-orientated" than boys: they gain satisfaction from developing their understanding of the work they are doing. Boys are more "ego-orientated": they gain satisfaction from their studies through performing better, or at least, no worse than others.

Teachers will need to devise ways of introducing competition into the learning process to meet the needs of boys without alienating the girls. At secondary level schools need to note that boys are more interested in gaining qualifications than in the intrinsic value of courses.

Lloyd puts Davis Cup job on line

BY ALIX RAMSAY, TENNIS CORRESPONDENT

NEVER has there been quite such a wiping of brows, a clearing of throats or a sucking of teeth as at the draw for the Davis Cup world group relegation play-offs yesterday. Despite all the efforts of Tim Henman and Greg Rusedski over the Easter weekend, Great Britain lost their tie with the United States and therefore have just one more chance to stay in the world group. So when South Africa were pulled out of the hat, at home, there was relief all round.

There were several nations lying in wait for Britain, all of whom could have made life difficult. The thought of playing Chile away on clay after the Henman taking the honours last time in Stockholm in November, but Rusedski has beaten Ferreira in their past three meetings, most recently at the US Open last year.

Not that Lloyd, Henman or Rusedski were anywhere to be seen. They have all gone their separate ways in search of sun and relaxation. From the beach in Barbados, Lloyd was as optimistic as ever.

"South Africa have a good team, they are tough cookies," he said. "Ferreira can be a great player but on a bad day he can be awful. After last weekend, to have a home tie is terrific and it will be fantastic for the fans, but for me it is an absolutely vital match. We cannot afford to lose the momentum we have gained. We cannot afford to be relegated."

Lloyd has pinned his immediate future on the tie. "I am quite a proud individual," he said. "and I'm very self-critical. If I lose this tie, it will be my last match as captain. I won't hang around."

He is already thinking of venues and playing surfaces. "The South Africans are brought up on cement, so we don't want that," he said. "We have the option of either going indoors or playing on grass and grass is to our advantage."

Lloyd believes Queen's Club could be the ideal venue. "We have to play it where the public can come and see it. I firmly believe the tie will be a sell-out and Queen's can seat 6,000 to 7,000."

Britain's only flaw is the lack of back-up. South Africa can call upon Ferreira, Marcos Ondruska, ranked 136, and David Nainkin, ranked 139, while their pairing of Adams and De Jager are No 5 in the doubles rankings. Without either Henman or Rusedski, the British team looks very weak indeed.

Lister searching for final flourish

SARAH POTTER

These days elite hockey players expect to carry their sticks for most of the year in pursuit of titles, cups and medals. Those in the eight-club women's Premier National League could, however, be forgiven for thinking that the final whistle should already have blown on a competition that started in October and finished almost a month ago.

This year, however, the English Hockey Association has called for extra time by deciding to use play-offs to find its champion. Slough, Ipswich, Highdown and Clifton must go first to Reading, on April 17, ahead of the final at the National Stadium in Milton Keynes in early May.

Sarah Lister, a former England and Great Britain midfielder player who has played for Ipswich for 17 years, admits it is a little hard on Slough, who finished top of the league. "The side who goes through a whole season and comes out with more points than anyone else should be acknowledged as the true winners," she said.

The chance to travel the artificial turf of foreign lands — as Slough, the English champions, and Clifton, the cup holders, have been doing — is the prize at stake. "Play-offs are an exciting finale to the season," Lister said, "and it means the club who finished fourth still has a chance to win and qualify for the European club championship."

Under Lister's captaincy, Ipswich have done that three times before. This season, before injuries and jitters stalled their momentum, the Suffolk side looked like they would score the psychological goal by finishing top. "Because of the play-offs system," Lister said, "we wanted first or second place."

They now get two chances of reaching the final. Slough and Ipswich will play at Reading and the winner goes forward to Milton Keynes. The victors from the other tie will play the losers of the Slough v Ipswich match to decide the other finalists.

Lister, 37, acknowledges her own stopwatch is ticking. "Realistically for me, we've got to win it this year," she said. "I want to compete in Europe again but I can't see myself playing any more after next season."

She has been here before, for England but, as seasons began to overlap, was forced to choose. Stick beat bat, although last autumn she represented England in the first women's indoor cricket World Cup in Australia. "I was brought up in Yorkshire, so I have some regrets about cricket," she said. "The World Cup was fun, although we didn't do very well and the summers playing in the indoor leagues seem to be in decline."

Hockey is a different story, where the elite become full-time professionals months ahead of the big events. "If we are going to compete with the best nations people can't train with full-time jobs," said Lister, a teacher at King Edward VI school in Bury St Edmunds.

"But the appetite for winning doesn't come through money. It's about personal attitude and the capacity to push yourself further than anyone else. That's difficult to coach and I'm not sure all the youngsters fully realise that."

Lister hopes increased professionalism will not swamp old-fashioned sportsmanship. "The Premier League is highly competitive, which is why it's so prized," she said. "But I think sometimes things are carried off the field in a way they never used to be."

Top of Lister's list of happy moments is leading England out at the now defunct Wembley international and winning bronze at the Barcelona Olympic Games. "I used to go to the Wembley international on a school trip every year and it was everyone's dream to play there," she said. "The Olympics were probably my proudest moment and that feeling, standing on the medal rostrum, is unforgettable."

With her self-confessed "twilight zone" fast approaching, Lister knows one more notable landmark for her already glittering memory lane.

BOXING

Hamed's entrance may leave Ingle cold

BY SRIKUMAR SEN
BOXING CORRESPONDENT

THE special entrances of Naseem Hamed go down a treat with the punters and, more often than not, last longer than the main event. But when Hamed meets Paul Ingle, at the Manchester Evening News Arena on Saturday, the son of lumiere might not go down well with the Scarborough man.

Hamed's brother, Riath, the boxer's business manager, has planned a special entrance that will last around 15 minutes. "We have something special planned," he said. "Something that's not been done before."

However, Ingle will not wait in the ring more than five minutes for Hamed to start the fight and if he is kept waiting any longer he will go back to his dressing-room. "If it takes more than five minutes, we're out of the ring," Frank Maloney, Ingle's manager, said yesterday. "This is not a gimmick. My fighter is not warming up in the dressing-room to get cold."

Maloney's non-complacent attitude was in keeping with his irritation after Hamed reminded him that Ingle had been knocked down in training in Pennsylvania. "If that happened in training, what would happen to him in the ring?" Hamed kept repeating throughout the final meeting between the two boxers in Manchester yesterday. Predictably, it was not long before the conference descended into a slanging match.

However, it was not Hamed who started the verbal punch-up. Matters came to a head only when Steve Pollard, Ingle's trainer, filed Hamed by asking him if he was in good health. Pollard said he did not want him to make any excuses after losing his title.

Ingle kept quiet. After 13 weeks of training he remains confident of beating the "unbeaten". He has £10,000 on himself to win at 5-1.

England grope for answers to one-day failings

FROM RICHARD HOBSON IN SHARJAH

IF THE problem of England's World Cup contracts is moving closer to a resolution, progress on the field is becoming harder to spot. A record of seven losses in eight one-day international matches is a disturbing one and there is little evidence to suggest that England are likely to improve in the sweetening heat here.

They arrived hoping success in the Coca-Cola Cup would build confidence, but now the gloomier reality must be considered. Extending the sequence of defeats will leave self-belief drained ahead of the opening game of the bigger tournament, against Sri Lanka on May 14.

David Graveney, the chairman of selectors, yesterday refused to underplay the significance of the game against India tonight, and declined the easy option of blaming the conditions here for a 90-run loss to Pakistan on Wednesday, when England conceded 323 runs in 50 overs, their most generous performance in almost 300 limited-overs fixtures. For Alec Stewart, the captain, it contributed towards a subdued 36th birthday yesterday.

Having consistently reiterated that winning the tournament takes priority over experimenting for the World Cup, England are in danger of failing to reach the final a week today unless bowlers chosen with overcast mornings back home in mind can find ways to restrict opposing batsmen and the fielding shows a marked improvement.

While Graveney said that the top six could be "taken as read" — a tacit acknowledgment that Andrew Flintoff has overtaken Adam Hogg — the opening partnership of

Nick Knight and Stewart is overdue a stand of substance. "The run of results is particularly disappointing and we have to dig deep for a performance against India," Graveney said. "The form of the top of the order is a concern, but I am confident of the ability of the two lads there."

"We are here to stop what has become a serious lack of success and that means picking the best team for these conditions. My consistent stance is that we need to embark on these tournaments more often than in the past."

Robert Croft is vulnerable today after failing to trouble the Pakistan batsmen and his most likely replacement is Ian Austin. Flintoff is unlikely to be asked to bowl the final over again after conceding 18 on Wednesday.

The absence of Sachin Tendulkar, who has decided to rest a back injury until the World Cup, has substantially weakened India who, like England, have suffered against Pakistan of late.

Graveney believes that new terms offered by the England and Wales Cricket Board for the World Cup will be approved by the players, who rejected the initial approach. No more money is offered overall, but it is understood that a basic sum upfront is greater and a minimum payment is guaranteed to anybody injured during the build-up.

"I know the terms, and based on a conversation with Alec I am confident that contracts will be signed either here or after players have taken them home for their lawyers," Graveney said.

Hughes gives stubborn lead

FENNER'S (first day of three: Cambridge University won toss; Cambridge University have scored 261 for seven wickets against Lancashire

AT A time when administrators are thrashing around in pursuit of change and appeasing the Minister of Sport tranquility still pervades Fenner's. County cricketers still seem to relish coming here as well as the Parks at the start of the season, and not merely with batting averages in mind.

Derek Randall, the Cambridge University coach, gambled around in the spring sunshine and remarked that he had never before seen sunglasses worn on the opening day of the season. True, it still announces itself in an apologetic way, but there was a fair crowd and not a blanket nor a Thermos in sight. Some of the cricket was commendable too. What has not remained constant is the old custom of the Cambridge captain, upon winning the toss, inviting the visitors to bat. When the stars are absent, in Sharjah or on the treatment table, there is not the same compunction to do so. Anyway, it was sufficiently warm for Schofield, the young Lancashire leg spinner, to bowl more overs, 23, than anyone else.

Without Singh, Smith and House, all of whom will be playing county cricket this summer, Cambridge's batting is not what it was last year. They are captained by Quentin Hughes, whose innings of 84 yesterday equalled his highest first-class score, achieved last year against Glamorgan. He does not boast a spectacular career average, nor a contractual attachment to a county, but he is solid enough.

Six Blues remain, including Imran Khan, son of Sadiq, a former Pakistan opener. The spelling, incidentally, is not a scorecard compiler's error: unlike Abdul Qadir's son, he is not another matter, but, at the age of 22, there is time enough to improve. All the other players Lancashire fielded had first-team experience. Only four of them are likely to be regulars this season, but now is the time to make an impression. And in the middle of all the action, taking two wicket with his medium pace and another with his off spin, and chasing the ball as hard as anyone, was Watkinson, a greying figure these days, but looking as keen as ever he was. Fenner's in the springtime has that effect on you.

University bowlers keep mind on the job

BY JACK BAILEY

THE PARKS (first day of three: Oxford won toss; Worcestershire have scored 284 for six wickets against Oxford University

IF THE first-class season has to start on April 8 — the earliest date on record — it could do so in many worse places than The Parks. A crisp, spring day and a benign pitch were all in favour of Worcestershire's batsmen, but although Paul Pollard, lately of Nottinghamshire, opened his account for Worcestershire with a half-century, featuring in a century opening partnership with Philip Weston, and David Leatherdale cruised to 71, Oxford were worthy opponents.

Cheap runs were at a premium. The Oxford bowlers, featuring two left-arm seamers in Dean Kinn and David Mather, and Tom Hicks, an accurate purveyor of off spin, concentrated on line and length. Their fielding, with James Fulton outstanding, was keen and effective, although a third man for the quicker bowlers would have saved many runs.

Although Pollard and Weston produced some sparkling off drives, they were never wholly dominant. Only when Leatherdale, in spite of fading light, busied himself with strokes all round the wicket, moving to his half-century from 76 balls with eight fours, did Oxford look like winning. It was perhaps significant that Hicks, who had bowled 26 overs on the trot before tea, taking two wickets for 61, had been rested before Leatherdale got under way. Hicks did not achieve much turn, but his accuracy and change of pace were potent weapons. Kinn also impressed. His figures suffered more than most from finding the outside edge with no third man.

SHARJAH (Pakistan won toss; Pakistan beat India by 16 runs

LIKE England 24 hours previously, India found themselves powerless to deny Pakistan anything but resounding victory at the CBFS Stadium last night. Evidently it requires more than familiarity with conditions here in Sharjah to threaten an invigorated side such as Pakistan, who appear more united and resourceful with each performance.

They took the attack to the India bowlers from the opening overs, when Ijaz Ahmed threatened to reprise his glorious century against England and, after a staler in mid-innings, tottered 279 for eight from 50 overs. In contrast, the India openers showed little stomach for the pace of Shoaib Akhtar.

India might, briefly, have held thoughts of victory when Kumble removed Ijaz leg-be-

Flagship Uberalles sets sail to keep Nicholls on course for title glory

BY ALAN LEE, RACING CORRESPONDENT

CHELTHAM'S champions are frequently fallible when asked to peak again on the distinctly different terrain of Aintree but Flagship Uberalles was supremely impressive yesterday, in confirming his status as the leading two-mile novice chaser. It was an event that Paul Nicholls, his trainer, observed at a distance of 200 miles.

These are to be the defining three days in Nicholls' bid to dethrone Martin Pipe as champion trainer and his spending the first of them at his local Taunton meeting was a demonstration of confidence, his Arkle Chase winner justified it in full. The five-year-old stretched easily away from six opponents to win the Sandeman Maghull Novices Chase by nine lengths.

Pipe had shrunk his deficit in the title race by more than £30,000 with a treble at Ascot on Wednesday and had serious prospects of further progress early yesterday. As it transpired, he had to wait for Horsa La Loi III to win the fifth race, and by then Nicholls had banked another £32,725.

The comprehensive defeat of Majadour, in the Martell Cup, was followed by another disappointing run for Pipe by Tresor De Mai, runner-up in the Arkle but beaten out of sight by his old rival here as Grimes and Dawn Leader led the unaunting pursuit of the 5-2 joint favourite.

Joe Tizzard, the 19-year-old jockey in whom Nicholls exhibits such faith, continues to repay him generously. There are days, he admits, when it is hard to absorb that he is riding high-profile winners instead of milking the cows on the family dairy farm. The statistics, however, show that this was his 71st of the season, leaving him only three short of the conditional jockey's record held by Tony McCoy.

Nicholls believes Tizzard will succeed McCoy as champion, so long as he can control the weight on his off frame. For now, though, the priorities of both men are with Double Thriller, the Grand National favourite.

Emphatically though Flagship Uberalles won, Tizzard's handling of him was composed and positive. Always travelling comfortably behind the two leaders, jumping fast and neatly, Flagship Uberalles quickened decisively off the final bend and kept up a relentless gallop to the line.

"That was really impressive," Tizzard said. "The couple of horses in front really set the race up for me, it was just a question of when I took it up."

think he has improved again since Cheltenham and he will take a lot of beating next year." Trainers know better than to worry prematurely about an embarrassment of riches in any department but Flagship Uberalles will theoretically be competing for the mature two-milers' championship now held by Nicholls' Call Equiname. This hugely impressive winner of the Queen Mother Champion Chase reappears today in the Mumm Melting Chase, the race that will be darkly remembered for featuring the death of One Man a year ago.

The significance of Call Equiname running here is threefold. It means his chima legs have survived their Cheltenham exertions well, it offers Nicholls an outstanding opportunity to pocket another rich prize, and it is over half-a-mile farther than his specialist distance.

Nicholls believes it will suit him, and he goes further. "I read somewhere that this horse could certainly never win a Gold Cup, I thought that was a big statement. I have the King George in mind for him next season and I do think he could be a Gold Cup horse the following year. He'll win another Champion Chase first, though."

MOTOR RACING: HOME-TOWN DRIVER SEEKS FIRST CAREER VICTORY IN BRAZILIAN GRAND PRIX

After six seasons in Formula One and 98 grands prix, Barrichello finally has a car that can bring him the victory he craves

Barrichello turns the corner

Rubens Barrichello is in a hurry, yet still desperate to make sure he does not let anyone down. The mobile phone is red hot as he dashes from Heathrow to his Bristol outpost in Cambridge to pack, before going back to the airport for a plane home to Brazil.

This is a man devoted to his family back in São Paulo and any chance to get home is grabbed with both hands. He says he needs the equilibrium of his wife, Silvana, and family life to balance the occasional insanity of Formula One, a madness that almost broke his fledgling career.

Barrichello seems a fixture in Formula One, with six seasons behind him and preparing to race this weekend in his 99th grand prix in front of his adoring home crowd, yet he is only 26 and is still to reach his prime as a driver.

That much was underlined in Melbourne, in the first race of this new season when, at last, he was piloting a Stewart Ford to reward his rich ability. A drive of determination and skill was overshadowed by Eddie Irvine's victory for Ferrari, but pitlane observers noted that Barrichello was the fastest man on the track for much of the race. If he had not had to start in last position from the pitlane, after his car caught fire on the grid, and then serve a penalty, maybe that first victory would have put Ferrari noses out of joint.

There would be no more popular winner, for Barrichello is one of the most pleasant personalities in motor racing, always cheerful, polite and willing to help. Even as he dashes for his plane, he remembers we are to meet and calls later to make sure we don't miss each other. "Home is important to me," he said. "Testing was cancelled so I can get to Brazil early. It will be a time to recharge the batteries and think about the race. So much is expected of me, and I want to do well for the Brazilian fans."

It was partly that burden of expectation that almost broke him: His family home overlooks the Interlagos circuit and he had lived under the fence as a boy to watch races. His speed as a youthful kart driver took him on his way to follow the great Ayrton Senna in the rich lineage of Brazilians in Formula One.

When he entered Formula One in 1993 with Jordan, Senna nurtured his countryman. Little over a year later, Senna was dead. Barrichello had lost his mentor and ally, and also found that his nation expected him to replicate Senna's success, even though he had only been in the sport for a year.

The next 18 months were among the worst in his life as the results failed to materialise. "It was a terrible time. People forgot how young I was."

Two things saved Barrichello: the support of his family and Jackie Stewart. The foundation of the new Stewart Ford team gave Barrichello a chance to start afresh, and Stewart, himself a three-times world champion, believed Barrichello had all the qualities for success. That belief was justified when, sensationally, the Brazilian took second place at Monaco in only the fourth race for the team.

Stewart said: "Rubens is a wonderful talent and he is such a nice man, too. He has it all to be a champion, but we need to provide him with a car that will win championships."

Which suit? If you hold AKQx or KQJ10x of a suit, it is usually right to start off with it more or less whatever it is and whatever the sequence. This does not happen often, however. More frequently you hold a motley collection of minor honours and need to choose a lead.

If partner has bid a suit, it is usually a good idea to lead it. Even if it is the wrong lead, it will keep him happy.

If no one has bid any suits (e.g. INT - 3NT), fourth highest of your longest and strongest is as good a rule as any (see Lesson 17).

If the enemy has bid some suits, this can be a great help. You will be leading through dummy's cards to your partner, with declarer playing last. So, while it is often a good idea to lead dummy's suit (lead through strength), you want to avoid leading a suit declarer has bid. It often works well to lead declarer's shortest suit, particularly when you think partner has length and strength there.

Kevin Eason believes the Brazilian driver is ready to fulfil his potential

Two things saved Barrichello: the support of his family and Jackie Stewart. The foundation of the new Stewart Ford team gave Barrichello a chance to start afresh, and Stewart, himself a three-times world champion, believed Barrichello had all the qualities for success. That belief was justified when, sensationally, the Brazilian took second place at Monaco in only the fourth race for the team.

that will win championships." Which was Barrichello's problem, because it was downhill all the way after Monaco. Last year was dreadful for Barrichello and Stewart Ford as the team, lumbered with a temperamental car, struggled. In 16 races, Barrichello failed to finish ten times.

Out of the carnage, though, has come a revival. The new Stewart Ford appears capable of blasting every rival off the track, save for the McLarens. Formula One has been riveted by Barrichello's test times and he is relishing in the prospect of a maiden victory.

"In the bad days I had to ask myself what I was doing," he said. "The answer was that I was doing something I loved, so I have forgotten all of the bad things to concentrate on enjoying my driving. But there is no way I am going to stay in Formula One without winning. It is going to come, I have to be patient."

The Ferraris are expected to be closer to the McLarens around the Interlagos circuit, but a three-way scrap between Hakkinnen, Coulthard and Schumacher might allow Irvine to make headway.

King tests Hendry's powers of resilience

By PHIL YATES

STEPHEN HENDRY, who has been happier with his game of late, once again demonstrated his resilience under pressure during a 5-4 victory over Mark King in the British Open at Plymouth yesterday.

When Hendry, who did not enjoy the best of fortune in the early stages, went 4-2 down, King appeared likely to cause the biggest upset of a tournament which, generally, has followed the formbook.

The six times world champion compiled a 100 break in the seventh frame, won a scrappy eighth, after King had squandered two good scoring chances and accounted for the decider in clinical fashion with a 137 total clearance, his 25th century of the season.

Hendry, who rallied from 8-4 down to beat Stephen Lee 9-8 in the final of the Benson and Hedges Irish Masters 12 days ago, drew considerable satisfaction from his fightback. "It proves that my attitude is good and that I can do the business when I have to. That's always a good sign, especially at this time of year," Hendry, second favourite for the Embassy world championship, said.

Quarter-final opposition for him will be supplied by Anthony Hamilton, the world No 11, who put out Mark Williams, winner of the Irish, Welsh and Thailand Opens this season, by 5-4. Hamilton, who had a 134 total clearance in the second frame, was pulled back from 4-2 up to 4-4 and Williams led 36-0 in the decider, Hamilton replying with a run of 59 before potting the green for victory.

John Higgins, the holder, enjoyed a more straightforward passage. He was engaged for only 73 minutes in beating Michael Holt 5-1, after losing the first frame to a yellow to pink clearance.

Higgins, who has dropped only two frames in three matches, now meets Nick Walker or Brian Morgan while Fergal O'Brien, the 5-2 conqueror of Gary Wilkinson, knows that further progress could well seal his place among the top 10 in the world rankings.

Oliver Holt says Juventus may regret their lack of ruthlessness

United draw comfort from escape

They are drawn to Juventus like moths to a flame — seeking the light, seeking the secret and always forgetting what it feels like to get burnt. Manchester United have become embroiled in a curious self-destructive flirtation with the Italian champions these past three years that bears all the hallmarks of unrequited love.

On Wednesday night we had been led to believe that the dynamic would change, that the admirers would become the admired, that United finally felt strong enough to stand up for themselves. Instead, when they went looking for approval, boasting about their new-found self-esteem, Juventus laughed in their faces.

In the first half, United watched helplessly as Juventus treated them to an exhibition in technique and possession football, just as they had two years ago, when they made United realise how far they had to travel before they had a chance of lifting club football's greatest prize.

In the end, English football was left clutching at those familiar straws of persistence and effort as La Vecchia Signora meted out her punishment for the impudence of suggesting that she had slipped into her dotage.

In Ukraine, Dynamo Kiev suffered for their inexperience, too, as Bayern Munich twice clawed their way back from two-goal deficits to draw 3-3. The Germans, who have not lost a match for five months and lead the Bundesliga by 16 points, are not only favourites to reach the European Cup final, they have also replaced United as favourites to win it.

If there is hope for United for the second leg of their semi-final, in the Stadio Delle Alpi on April 21, it does not spring from anything that happened at Old Trafford on Wednesday. There was nothing to suggest that United might be the equals of Juventus in Turin. The glimmer of encouragement comes from the fact that the complacency, almost the lethargy, that pervaded their performance.

from the laziness of their tactics to the carelessness of their passing and the overblown expectations of their supporters, has been banished.

Juventus came close to humiliating them. United knew that better than anyone. Zinedine Zidane, hobbling around on one good leg, ran rings round them. Edgar Davids outthought Roy Keane. Didier Deschamps turned Paul Scholes into the Invisible Man. United were lucky to escape with a 1-1 draw.

"Zidane was absolutely fabulous," Ryan Giggs, whose last-minute equaliser cancelled out Antonio Conte's first-half goal, said. "Playing like that when he was not supposed to be fully fit was unbelievable. How can they say there was something wrong with him? He has got strength, experience and a great touch with both feet. He was nothing short of magnificent."

The only way in which Zidane and his team-mates erred is that they did not kill United off. They have benefited from generosity like that themselves this season as they scrambled their way to this stage of the competition. They, more than anyone, know the pitfalls in the abandonment of ruthlessness. So if United have anything to cling on to, it is that their opponents filed on to their coach not full of elation but aching with regret.

"We have not done enough to make sure we can get to the final," Davis said. "With English teams you only know you have won the contest when the whistle blows for the final time. It will be very hard for us in Turin because United never give in. "Normally when Italian teams take the lead like we did they lock the door and throw away the key. But this time we gave United the key back. We saw the real United in the second half. After half-time they played with more aggression going forward and Giggs began to shine. He only really played for one half but he was superb when he got going."

"We will have to watch him carefully in the second leg. We know the tie is not over. We will have to come to Italy and do to us what we have just done to them. We will have to be very focused if we are to finish what we started."

Alex Ferguson, the United manager, was quick to launch his damage-limitation act. Forged by United's 3-3 draw with Barcelona in the Nou Camp, their 2-2 draw with Bayern in the Olympic Stadium and by the fact that they are still unbeaten in the European Cup this season, he had a hunch, he said, that United could win the tie in Turin.

His theory is not totally implausible. Juventus have not played as they did at Old Trafford so far this season and they may not play like it again. It is too risky a strategy for them to play for a goalless draw and if Yorkie and Cole rediscover the rich vein of form that deserted them, United can reasonably expect to make a game of it. Next time, they will know better than to expect Juventus to slip meekly into subservience.

St Albans hoping for good luck to continue

NON-LEAGUE FOOTBALL
By KEITH PIKE

WHEN the draw for the semi-finals of the FA Umbro Trophy paired Cheltenham Town and Kingstonsian together in a heavyweight duel, it may have guaranteed that Wembley would welcome warm favourites on May 15, whoever delivered the knockout blow. It also ensured that one set of underdogs would have their day at the Twin Towers.

The first legs tomorrow feature a catchweight contest between St Albans City and Forest Green Rovers at Clarence Park, where a team that had never reached even the last 32 of non-league football's most glamorous competition hosts one that stands three matches away from a place in non-league history. In 1982, Forest Green, the unheralded club from deepest Gloucestershire, won the FA Vase, and no club has managed to capture both pieces of silverware.

St Albans, as the one member of the quartet from outside the Nationwide Conference, are the clear outsiders, but their run to the last four suggests that Garry Hill's team has the Midas touch in the Trophy. The Ryman League side was 20 seconds from elimination by Ashton United in the fourth round, overcame Dagenham and Redbridge in the fifth despite playing half the match without a recognised goalkeeper, and snatched a last-minute winner against Boston United in the quarter-final through Tom Meredith, a full back who arrived at the ground expecting to be dropped.

"We will just go out and play to our strengths, but we know that Forest Green are firm favourites and that we can't afford even one or two people having an off-day," Hill said. A key man will be Steve Clark, 35, the striker who has scored nearly 300 goals in 437 games for them.

Cheltenham, beaten twice in 16 games, the Trophy holders and with one hand on the Conference title, will be in good heart at Kingsmeadow, but if anyone is capable of plotting their defeat it is Geoff Chapple, the Kingstonsian manager, who led Woking to three Wembley triumphs between 1994 and 1997.

FOOTBALL IN BRIEF

■ Alen Boksic scored a 77th-minute equaliser to earn Lazio a 1-1 draw against Lokomotiv Moscow in their European Cup Winners' Cup semi-final first leg yesterday. Zaza Dzhanaashvili, who scored a hat-trick in Lokomotiv's quarter-final victory over Maccabi Haifa, had put the Russian side ahead in the first minute when he went round Luca Marchegiani, the Lazio goalkeeper, and finished on the turn.

Lazio finished the stronger and Russian Nigmatullin, the Lokomotiv goalkeeper, denied Dejan Stankovic from close range with three minutes remaining.

■ Kevin Keegan is concerned about England playing a friendly against Hungary as FA Carling

Premiership clubs move into the final stages of the quest for trophies. The England coach, who leads the national team out against Hungary on April 28, said: "I've got my doubts about whether England should be playing a friendly. 'They are all coming to the vital stage of the season where they are playing for massive prizes and we say, 'well we'll take these four players'. That's a difficult one."

team lost 1-0 to a 64th-minute Gaspard Komol goal. In their opening match on Monday, England lost 1-0 to the United States and are bottom of their group.

■ Aston Villa confirmed yesterday that they have applied for a place in the InterToto Cup. Although the competition has been marginalised in recent years, it now provides another route into next season's UEFA Cup. Villa's move has been dictated by the new system of qualification introduced by UEFA. Instead of the team that finishes in fifth place in the Premiership gaining entry to the UEFA Cup, that place has been allocated to Newcastle United, the FA Cup semi-finalists.

■ Fabian De Freitas, the West Bromwich Albion striker, has been fined two weeks' wages for failing to turn up in time for the Bank Holiday defeat at Crewe Alexandra. Denis Smith, the manager, said the player had apologised after thinking it was an evening kick-off.

■ Matt Jansen, the Blackburn Rovers forward, is not expected to play again this season because of injury. The England Under-21 player has suffered cartilage damage in his knee and faces an operation.

■ Roy Hodgson, the former Blackburn manager, could be named as the new Austria manager next week. If Otto Baric, the favourite for the position, declines the offer, Hodgson, who has coached Switzerland at international level, could yet succeed Herbert Prohaska, who was sacked by the Austria Football Federation.

■ Joe Royle, the Manchester City manager, will begin his attempts to sign Terry Cooke on a permanent deal today. Cooke has been on loan at City, from Manchester United, but the loan spell expires on April 17.

Mather breaks country code

A heavenly club with a hell of a course

Reckless Tiger fails to see the woods for the trees

I was quite a group setting out at 10.38 yesterday morning at Augusta. Tiger Woods, Sergio Garcia and a young man called Tim Herron, who everyone referred to as Lumpy, I have to admit, I was unacquainted with Lumpy, and was rather startled to see him in the course wearing a "Lumpy" baseball cap. Personally, I would hate to be known as Lumpy, but I suppose there are different ways of looking at things when you can do the front nine at Augusta in a very respectable par 36. Especially, I assume, when alongside you, Tiger Woods is taking 38, and the sun is so hot that shots into the shade of the pines look a lot more tempting than they ought to.

Woods famously took 40 on the front nine in his Masters-winning year of 1997; the shock of it impelled him to greater exertions. So it was no matter for alarm when the first few holes yesterday found him following up his birdie-three on the first with a par five and then a bogey-five on the third. Perhaps the famous Tiger-proofing of Augusta had been successful — although, come to think of it, redesigning a course just to foil one player seems a bit vindictive really. The way it's generally discussed, Augusta moved some trees back, added bunkers and everything, just to make one particular man's life a bit more difficult.

Anyway, the Tigermania crowd that usually cheers Tiger every inch of the way, and murmurs significantly when he adjusts his baseball cap or wipes his nose, was likewise determined not to peak too soon. So, apart from murmuring respectfully "Split the fairway in half" or "That was an iron shot" they were biding their time, endlessly reminding each other who Garcia was, and waving "Rah Lumpy!" whenever the Herron chap went by.

What the experts always want to know is how Tiger will handle the par-fives. And well, yesterday, it wasn't great. I can tell you because I was toiling around the course under a fierce sun, keeping him in sight, and saying "My, it's so hot", like something out of Tennessee Williams. A tiger, a kid and a person famous for their lumps — it's just not a combination that you come across every day. Anyway, on the pink dogwood second hole — where Herron efficiently birdied — Tiger found himself with a chance of a birdie, but only if he could putt successfully hung, uphill and breaking left. "He always goes for the hole shot," someone said nearby, as the putt rolled on past the hole. "Believing he can do any shot is his strength, but it's also his weakness."

And the description turned out to be prophetic, because on the 8th hole — a 550-yard uphill hole with a green cut off from view by the horizon — Woods teed off into the pine trees on the left of the fairway and as the ball made a sickening "crack", he dropped momentarily through the time-space continuum. It was alarming, I can tell you.

It was also so hot out on the course by now that usually well-organised people, who had stupidly left all their money in the press room (I mean, mel, were forgetting to be Blanche Dubois any more and just begging at the concession stands for a bit of ice to suck on.

In short, I was pink, foot-sore and delirious, and to see Woods disappear from the action was a bit too like a nightmare. "Hope he doesn't go for the hero shot," I said to myself, staggering slightly, at which point "crack" — he hit the trees again, and his ball ricocheted deeper into the greenery. "He should have taken a drop," people were whispering around me, and after a great deal of kerfuffle, a drop is what he duly took. He ended up with a triple-bogey eight, and his supporters exchanged significant glances as they looked in disbelief at the score-book.

Woods has plenty to chew on after recording a triple-bogey eight at the par-five 8th hole

"Tiger blew up?" they asked. Glancing at my idiot's guide to the course, I noted that the long hitter on the eighth is recommended to drive the ball "past or over" the fairway bunker on the right. But Tiger wasn't playing the long hitter role yesterday. In fact, it was a mystery what he was trying to do.

The birdies started again for Woods, thank goodness, on the inward nine, but unfortunately by then I was lying under a bush, trying to cool down with an ice-pack on my head, so I didn't see it.

Garcia, who had started his round badly with two bogeys and had scored 39 on the front nine, finally started birdying too. I hope his head came up at that point; he looked tense and somehow embarrassed when I was watching him, as his shots zigzagged the fairways in the manner once memorably described by P.G. Wodehouse as like a liner pursued by submarines.

Sparkling Andrews

THERE were easy victories and close victories in the first round of the Halford Hewitt Cup yesterday, but none was narrower than the margin by which Repton defeated Radley. With the match score standing at 2-2, the final four-some went into extra time, and sudden-death did not befall Radley until the 23rd hole of the contest.

Repton, who have not won this annual team matchplay tournament of the Public Schools Golfing Society since 1986, were represented in the crucial match by Keith Andrews and Douglas Campbell, their captain, and Andrews it was who sank the winning putt on the 5th.

It was from no more than 6ft, though by the time the tale had been retold a few times in the Royal Cinque Ports clubhouse the distance was probably closer to twice that: golfers are like anglers in their pre-disposition to romantic exaggeration.

Malvern, three times the beaten finalists in the Nineties, had a 4-1 victory over Bishop's Stortford, and Charterhouse, the defending champions, beat Downsview by a similar score.

Comedy's hit parade

Laughter in the House
BBC1, 9.30pm

The final part of this Julie Walters-narrated series brings us through the years from The Young Ones to Birds of a Feather, Men Behaving Badly, One Foot in the Grave and Absolutely Fabulous, via Yes, Minister and Only Fools and Horses. I found the comment and analysis from writers and performers better than in previous episodes, with the background on Yes, Minister and Men Behaving Badly particularly enlightening. The clips used are tantalising, especially when Del Boy's evening in the wine bar ends before the famous pratfall through the open bar-flap, but at least we do get almost all of that sequence from One Foot in the Grave in which a blindfolded Mr Meldrew sleeps with a bewildered old woman, thinking she is his wife.

Frasier: Three Valentines
Channel 4, 10pm

As with Wednesday's Christmas special of ER, we find ourselves out of step with America, tonight's trio of entirely self-contained sketches rather belatedly marking Valentine's Day. No apologies are necessary, however, for it includes possibly the funniest piece of (almost) wordless comedy this side of Chaplin, Niles Crane (David Hyde Pierce) is using Frasier's apartment (complete with resident dog, Eddie, a fasciated cockler) to entertain the female president of the wine society to dinner — and things don't go quite according to plan.

Walden On Villains: Hitler
BBC2, 7.30pm

Brian Walden's series on heroes caused a stir when he questioned Nelson Mandela's right to that status, but this new run is far less likely to cause controversy, at least in terms of the subject included. A 20-minute piece, delivered straight to camera, without Autocue or pauses for sips of water, unillustrated apart from a final still image of Hitler, this should by rights be impossible.

The classic Only Fools and Horses features in Laughter in the House (BBC1, 9.30pm) viewing. That it isn't, although Walden's verbal tics, and idiosyncratic pronunciation are problematic, is tribute both to the enduring fascination of Hitler's rise to power and to the insight Walden brings to bear upon it. He sees Hitler as the first truly modern politician, a demagogue who gained the support of the people by offering them the chance to escape the boring reality of party politics, offering them a vision of community and spiritual awakening, only they would trust him to make their dreams come true.

Beware: Shoplifters at Work
ITV, 9pm

Not quite a docu-soap, more the first in a new series devoted to various crimes and those who make their living from them. There are interviews with shoplifters, including one who was barred by court order from two of the country's largest retailers, with security staff and store detectives. Closed-circuit television film from around the world reveals some of the truly ingenious and some downright ludicrous ways in which these thieves attempt to shop without paying; we also see retailers and shoplifters coming face to face at a clothing fair.

RADIO CHOICE

Radio 4, 1.30pm

At last, the return of the programme that gives the listeners a chance to let off steam. Much like Prime Minister's Question Time, Feedback returns once a week and twice as long, but with all due respect to the highly-regarded Roger Bolton, I remain at a loss to explain why Chris Dunkley is no longer the presenter. If it is true that Dunkley was insufficiently malleable, one can only hope that Bolton will prove equally hard to please, but the difficulty here is that whereas Dunkley was television critic for the Financial Times, Bolton actually works for the BBC — as head of Network Production in Manchester. Still, the proof is in the eating. New features include a slot where listeners will be able to interview broadcasters.

Sound Stories: Cathedrals
Radio 3, 11am

Sound Stories is not much longer for this world but while it lasts I (and a good many listeners) will remain unfashionably loyal. I suspect that I like the series because I learn things that I did not know before, whereas of course your typical Radio 3 listener is above admiring that there might be anything to be learnt by listening to the radio. Oh well. Today the subject is York Cathedral, which was struck by lightning a couple of years ago. There was also a fire at the cathedral in 1829, but I had not realised until today's programme that it started when a man set fire to the organ because he disliked its tone. Today's music includes Haydn's The Creation and Elphig by Mendelssohn.

Journey into light with a one-time enemy

There is no getting around it. Burns to the face are not pretty. It is not just the fact of the disfigurement, but the nature of it — flesh seared into grotesque shapes, like molten wax, nostrils exposed, eyelids unnaturally stretched or hooded, ears missing. The sight cuts through us, screaming "raw pain" at those fortunate enough to see a normal healthy image in the bathroom mirror.

Repair work helps, but not much. The worst ravages are disguised, but the results can take on a Frankenstein quality. Such faces are the stuff of cheap horror movies. "That must be terrible to live with," we murmur, with a chill. In fact it is our reaction, not the disfigurement itself, that is the problem.

After a long dark night of the soul, Britain's most famous burns victim, Simon Weston, decided he had better just carry on regardless and get as much as he could out of his life. If Simon's Journey (BBC1) was only half accurate, the strategy has worked a treat.

Last night we saw him parachuting and running a marathon in New York for his charity, the Weston Spirit. He has a cheerful, sporty wife, Lucy — who says she wouldn't have fancied the man he was before he was injured — children and a house that looks like a showroom. His life, he says, "is very rich and very happy now".

Given the potent cocktail of nationalistic emotions stirred by the Falklands war, it is ironic that this victim of military misjudgment has become the conflict's only leading light. I doubt that any other participant would be the subject of so many documentaries.

No images brought the war home more rudely than the footage from Bluff Cove: that Welsh Guardsman on a stretcher, shreds of flesh hanging from the stump of his leg; the Sir Galahad burning livid orange, under dense black smoke, while inside, Weston's hands were burning as he vainly tried to save three of his mates.

The profile interest that footage with Weston's life now and clips from earlier stages of his long road to recovery, moaning for painkillers in Woolwich Military Hospital and giving his mother hell as he struggled with depression.

Most fascinating was the growing relationship with Carlos Cachón, Argentine Skyhawk pilot who bombed the ship. Befriending this thoughtful, modest man seems to have done more than anything else to complete Weston's redemption in this "human interest story" par excellence. And by the end of the programme, I had ceased to notice his injuries.

What a contrast to Mary Chipperfield, recently convicted on 12 counts of cruelty to a chimpanzee named Trudi. You might think that Secrets Of The Circus (Channel 4) was a rare example of a documentary team taking the trouble and risk involved in some genuine investigative journalism. Except that the undercover filming was all done by a West London-based all done by a West London-based pressure group called Animal Defenders. In the age of the fake and the docusoap, it seems, you might as well do it yourself.

The group infiltrated five of its "field officers" into nine of Britain's 17 animal circuses and three sets of winter quarters. Only one of the establishments they targeted did not treat its animals cruelly. They used concealed body cameras and static cameras to collect evidence, so we saw everything in glorious fuzzorama.

Mary Chipperfield's way of "bonding" with Trudi the chimp, for instance, was to shout at her, as if she were some obstinately disobedient child, then give her a good kicking. These are wild creatures who have no natural need to bond with people, according to animal behaviourist Sam Scott, so she suspected it all has to be done by fear.

Well guessed. I assumed it would be rather difficult for anything as small and puny as a human being to intimidate an elephant. Wrong. If you whack its backside hard enough with a hooked iron bar, it will do what you want. Really to hurt it, however, you should smash it on the jaw. "I caught him nice," boasted circus worker Steven Gills, after doing just this to a victim called Tembo. Gills also swears a lot, and even though the animals don't speak English, I expect they get the gist.

After an elephant, a camel is a doddle. A few good cracks with a big stick and the most recalcitrant Bactrian will do your bidding. Even a lion can be persuaded to move cages if you bash it in the mouth with a tent pole. Just don't get too close with it.

The violence was only the more lurid part of this story. Inadequate veterinary care, cages so cramped the animals became neurotic, elephants tethered or shackled for 23 hours at a stretch, dogs left in waterlogged enclosures in winter, the casual cruelty was breathtaking and all in the name of fun.

One outfit had a lioness injured by a tiger and not properly treated. When an RSPCA inspector called they hid her behind some bales of sawdust. He missed her, but we didn't. Animal Defenders' efforts have brought a few successful prosecutions, but animal circuses are barely regulated and it is the law that needs to change.

Over on BBC2 it was vampires who were having a hard time, with the return of Buffy The Vampire Slayer for a second series. Buffy takes the Mary Chipperfield approach to these poor misunderstood creatures, kicking them quite literally to bits and smashing their skeletons with a sledgehammer.

This is Karate Kid meets Hammer horror, meets high school dating movie, complete with American teen slang. The cast have names like Charisma Carpenter and Robia La Morte. It was cool for a while but hey, I am just so over it!

Lyle puts troubles behind him with fluent 71

FROM JOHN HOPKINS, GOLF CORRESPONDENT IN AUGUSTA

THERE is a Valhalla in golf in the United States, a place where ghosts of the past suddenly come to life. It is known as Augusta, Georgia, where yesterday Sandy Lyle rediscovered the form that he has not known for years.

It was extraordinary to watch the way that Lyle, walking with that heavy-footed stride of his, a towel around his neck to ward off the heat and cope with the oppressive humidity, managed to get round in 71, one under par, and be up with the leaders.

These days, indeed these past few years, the game has been so troublesome for Lyle that there have been many occasions when one has wondered why he has continued. A resident of Jacksonville, Florida, he makes occasional forays to Europe, but wherever he goes he seems to be a slightly forlorn figure. Until yesterday, that is, because in his best opening round here since 1988, the year he won, Lyle looked at times as he did of old.

Around him the ghosts were flitting to and fro. John Daly was one of the early leaders before finishing with a 72 and Jose Maria Olazabal, the champion in 1994, proved how these famous green acres can bring back memories that can be inspirational. A 70 for him put him one behind the early leader, Brandel Chamble, who was three under par, as were Davis Love III and Scott McCarron. Tiger Woods, the 1997 champion, however, took an eight at the par-five 8th hole and turned in 38, two over par.

Colin Montgomerie, Lyle's fellow Scot, whose public posture before the start of the 63rd Masters was one of bemusement mixed with depression, gave himself the sort of start he was desperate for making only one mistake and finishing, like Olazabal, with a 70.

Lyle's troubles seemed to have increased when, on Monday, word reached him and his wife, Jolande, that their nanny and two children had been involved in a car crash in Florida. Mercifully it was not too serious.

Lyle was plugged in a bunker on the 4th for the first of his two bogeys, but then sank a 12-foot putt for a birdie on the 5th and somehow coasted in a curling 12-footer on the 7th. Although he missed the green on the 9th, he played a magnificent wedge from the fringe of the green to within an inch of the hole to turn in 35. After all this, he looked less like the forgotten man of Europe. But after a good outward rime he still had a fight on his hands.

The 12th, perhaps the most difficult short hole in golf, caught him out when his tee shot trickled through the green, but any bad luck he might have had on this hole was given back on the next, when his ball did not roll back down the bank into Rae's Creek.

It took a good putt of ten feet or so from the fringe of the green for him to get his par on the 16th and his chip from the back of the 17th popped into the hole and came out again. It was a Lyle the likes of which has not been seen for a long time who made his way up the 18th, where his drive ended near where it had in 1988. He then hit a magnificent five-iron to a flag that was positioned on the back right-hand corner of the green. In a mood such as he was in he was always likely to hole the ensuing five-footer, and so he did.

Montgomerie might have been even happier than Lyle, but you would not have known it from his demeanour at the end. It had been a round in which he had made only one mistake, when he took three putts on the 6th. It was, he said, exactly the start he had been looking for. "The man who wins this will be the one who makes the least mistakes, not the one who gets the most birdies," he said. "The course is only going to get tougher and tougher. I am a bit more confident than I've been in the past. The width of the fairways and the new rough means more than they did before."

There is increasing evidence that he is coming to terms with a course that has beaten him in the past — or so he has thought. In fact, his eighth-place finish last year was not only his best here, but his best in any of the major championships in 1998, and his last two rounds of 69 and 70 were as well as he has managed at that stage of the tournament.

Such was Montgomerie's determination not to be carried away that he failed even to remember a magical shot he had played on the 4th, when, having driven over the back of this tricky par-three, he somehow got the ball close enough to hole for a par. Steve Jones, a playing partner, bowed in mock admiration. A home-ward nine of 33 on a day when all competitors were finding the capricious wind making the course difficult was a score to send even Montgomerie happily in for a late lunch.

Ferguson hoping to attract Zidane

BY OLIVER HOLT
FOOTBALL CORRESPONDENT

MANCHESTER United have made the first move in an attempt to secure the services of the player who has driven them to the brink of elimination from the European Cup by inquiring about the availability of Zinedine Zidane.

Zidane, the man who scored two goals for France against Brazil in the World Cup final last July and was voted the world's best player by Fifa earlier this year, orchestrated the masterly Juventus performance that resulted in a 1-1 draw with United in the first leg of their semi-final on Wednesday night.

Alex Ferguson, the United manager, has expressed his admiration for the Frenchman many times and it is believed that members of the Old Trafford board met their Juventus counterparts before Wednesday's game to register their interest should the player become available.

It is likely that Zidane will leave the Italian champions at the end of the season, partly because of his disillusionment about the turn events in Turin have taken, partly because his wife has become bored of life in the city.

It is thought that Zidane, who was the best player on the pitch on Wednesday night despite the fact that his right knee was heavily strapped and he was clearly not fully fit, would cost United a fee somewhere in the region of £18 million.

Undoubtedly, he would give them the guile and the presence on the ball in the centre of midfield, the ability to dictate the pace of the match, that is the one quality United still conspicuously lack.

Ferguson has already joked about moving Old Trafford to the seaside to accommodate the wishes of Zidane's wife, who has expressed a preference for living in a coastal city, and the Frenchman may be more tempted by the lure of a club such as Barcelona.

The suspicion remains, though, that he is the type and the quality of player that United must attract if they are to take the final, elusive step towards being the best club side in Europe.

Australia fightback masks burning issues

FROM PAT GIBSON
IN ANTIGUA

IT IS the way of cricket these days that West Indies and Australia barely have time to reflect on a Test series that had to be seen to be believed before embarking on an island-hopping excursion around the Caribbean crammed with seven one-day internationals.

As Steve Waugh, clutching the Frank Worrell trophy which he had just managed to hang on to in his first series as Australia's captain, said: "It's hard to put it all into perspective right now. There were so many times when we thought we were going to win a Test and then they thought they were going to win it. I am not really sure why it was so up and down."

Australia had West Indies on the floor in Trinidad, where they collapsed to their lowest Test score of 51, were staggered themselves by two monumental innings from Brian Lara, in Jamaica and Barbados, and then came back to outpoint their challengers emphatically in Antigua.

It was the most compelling cricket, yet when it was all over, neither side was entirely satisfied. Australia, sustained by the steadfast Steve Waugh, felt that they could have won all four Tests; West Indies, inspired by Lara, believed the momentum he had generated would keep them ahead.

Both now have problems to address for the simple reason that the series was dominated by five great players — Lara, Curtly Ambrose and Courtney Walsh of West Indies, Steve Waugh and Glenn McGrath of Australia — and they cannot end he was getting most things right.

"I am the first to admit that I am going to have to learn as a captain," he said. "It was a bit much to expect me to pull all the right strings straight off, but I expect to improve in every game and I think Antigua was the best I've done."

As for Lara, he seems to be growing up at last. He looked like a little boy lost when he was presiding over the shameful 5-0 whitewash in South Africa, but he lifted not just his team but the entire region with the glory of his batting.

"It was a tremendous team effort," he said generously. "We always knew that it was going to be tough for us playing against the world champions in the last Test," he said, "and they proved to be better than us, but I am very optimistic about the future. As time goes on we are going to be a much better unit and a force to be reckoned with once more."

There are going to be significant changes in West Indies cricket as the president of the board, Pat Rousseau, who has been embarrassed by many of the decisions taken by the people around him, assembles a new structure.

The positions of Clive Lloyd, the team manager, and Malcolm Marshall, the coach, are among those under review, but one man is sure of his tenure. Lara, a perceived delinquent in need of corrective training when he was put on probation for the first two Tests, is now master of all he surveys from his home in the hills above the Caribbean.

Lara: growing into role

England turn to Mather

BY DAVID HANDS
RUGBY CORRESPONDENT

ENGLAND will introduce two newcomers in their search for the grand slam against Wales at Wembley on Sunday, the final day of the Five Nations Championship. Barrie-Jon Mather will join Steve Hanley, his Sale colleague, after the withdrawal through injury yesterday of Jeremy Guscott, England's longest-serving player.

At 6ft 6in and 16st 4lb, Mather, 26, must have a claim to be the biggest back to appear in an England jersey. He played in the second row for England Schools before moving to play rugby league for Wigan in 1991, winning England and Great Britain caps at wing or centre.

With Will Greenwood, of Leicester, and Phil de Glanville, of Bath, long-term casualties, Mather understudied Guscott in training this week before the Bath player conceded that his strained hamstring would not allow him to make his sixtieth appearance for his country.

Mather wins preference over Nick Beal, the Northampton utility back, who played at centre during the southern-hemisphere tour last summer. Tony Underwood, the Newcastle wing, has been added to the replacements.

Mather will be the sixth Sale player to have been capped by Clive Woodward, the England coach, five of them backs.

Kosovo Emergency

Traumatized and exhausted, they are victims of a horrific human tragedy.

Action Against Hunger's teams are doing their utmost to bring relief to the refugees in Macedonia, Albania and Montenegro. Several tons of food have already been distributed. More food is on the way with special food products for children, hygiene products and water and sanitation equipment.

The People of Kosovo need your help now.
